... but first a word from our editor

Welcome to our twenty-fifth issue, and our seventh year of publication I hope that you will find the contents interesting and useful in learning about the world of our ancestors

In this issue, we have a focus on the town of Jędrzejów ("Yendjev") – a translation of the article from Yad VaShem's Hebrew-language Pinkas HaKehillot, a translation of a Polish-language article from Warsaw's Biuletyn Żydowskiego Instytutu Historycznego w Polsce, a transcript of the Jędrzejów entries from the 1929 Polish Business Directory, and from the Jędrzejów Yizkor Book, a translation of the Table of Contents and the full necrology of Holocaust martyrs

The vital records extracts in the issue are from two district center towns (miasto powiat = "county seat") Włoszczowa (a "new" town for us) – marriages 1858-1884, and Opoczno – marriages and deaths 1848-1851

Jewish Records Indexing - Poland (JRI)'s Polish State Archives (PSA) project is finally moving forward in the Kielce-Radom area. In addition to the current project at the Pińczów archives (see V 4, pages 38-39), there are now two new PSA projects for archives branches in our region Radom, Starachowice and Sandomierz See the details on pages 33-37 of this issue This leaves only the Kielce and Jędrzejów Archives without Archive Coordinators Hopefully someone will step forward, so that the records in these archives can also be indexed I hope that all researchers with an interest in the towns in these archives will participate

To assist readers in determining which branch of the PSA holds the 19th-century vital records for their town, I created a table, found on page 33 of this issue Perets Mett assisted me in providing the Yiddish names of each of these towns

Other articles in this issue include Betty Starkman's account of a meeting of descendants from the town of Iłża ("Driltsh"), and the translation of the article on Sandomierz ("Tzuzmir") from the pre-WWI Russian-language Evreiskaia Entsiklopediia

This issue is brought to you by two new volunteers Carol Isaak of California is now handling Production the printing and mailing aspects of our Journal, and Debra Braverman of New York is our Membership coordinator, managing subscriptions and finance I am very grateful to have these dedicated volunteers

We are still in need of articles and material contributions for the Journal If you would like to assist, please contact me

Jędrzejów is one of the most ancient settled places in Poland. It was established upon the lands of the village of Berzerzinka, a gift of the brothers Janisław and Klement Grichim, bearers of important positions in the church in the Cistercian order. The monks of this order were brought to Poland from Burgundy and were known for their contribution to the development of agriculture, construction, fishing and other areas. In 1149, a monastery was built there and a town grew up around it, which increased and developed quickly. In 1271, Bolesław the Humble, the king of Poland, granted the settlement the status of a city, and at about the same time the name was changed to Jędrzejów. In 1510, a great fire broke out in Jędrzejów which destroyed the vast majority of the town. In the wake of the catastrophe, the inhabitants appealed to the king of Poland, Zygmunt the First, and requested that he reaffirm the rights of the city of Jędrzejów and grant it privileges to ease its reconstruction. The king granted their request, and soon a wave of development was felt in the town and the local population grew. During the 16th and 17th centuries, several important conventions of the Polish nobility took place in Jędrzejów. Over time, Jędrzejów became a commercial and manufacturing center for the region. During the 18th century, there were 20 cobblers' workshops there, 10 hatters' workshops, and dozens of workshops for other artisans. During that same century, silk production developed there and during the 19th century the manufacture of various textiles developed there as well.

In 1815, as a result of the decisions of the Congress of Vienna, Jędrzejów was included in the Congress Kingdom of Poland, which was under Russian rule. In 1817, the Cistercian monks' ownership of the monastery and the city was revoked and the Czarist government of Russia was recognized as the owner of the city. In 1885, a railway station was built in Jędrzejów, and an agricultural implement factory, a foundry, a brewery, two sawmills and a steam driven flour mill were established there. In large areas around the city, tobacco and fruit orchards were cultivated, and bee-keeping also developed.

In this period, a teachers' seminar was established in Jędrzejów, which was known throughout Congress Poland.

The city continued to develop during the years between the two world wars as well.

On September 4th, 1939, Jędrzejów was conquered by the German army. The Germans expelled part of the Polish population from the city, liquidated the Jewish habitation that had existed there and destroyed its economic infrastructure.

The Jews during the 19th and early 20th Centuries

The first Jews settled in Jędrzejów during the 19th century, since up until then the Catholic Church and Cistercian order had barred them from living there. Only after the publication of the decrees of Czar Alexander II in June of 1862, were the limitations regarding settlement in the city cancelled and Jews began to come to the city in great numbers from the neighboring towns in their search for work. In the list of the first Jews to settle in Jędrzejów, 80 people are listed by name. These Jews were the pioneers in wholesale and retail business and also in manufacturing; there were among them also several religious functionaries: 3 ritual slaughterers, 2 shamashim [beadles], Rabbi Jerachmiel Mincberg, teacher and ritual slaughterer – the butcher Kuncpolski. The first leaders of the Jędrzejów community were its chief Izrael Jechiel Gersztajn and the members of the community committee Natan Zerach Nechemja and Jona Ajzenberg. The first asset of the community was the building in which two study halls functioned, a large one and a small one, and a cemetery outside of the city. The first to be buried there was a Jewish soldier from Russia who died during his service in Jędrzejów. The community income came from the properties it owned, from the institutions it operated, from the ritual slaughter and from the bathhouse, which was leased, as well as from the cemetery. The community members paid taxes according to the decision of the assessors who were elected especially for this task. From this income the salaries of the rabbi, the ritual slaughterer, the teacher and the shamashim were paid.

The first rabbi in Jędrzejów was Rabbi Natan, the son-in-law of the Chassidic Admo"r Rabbi Mosze HaKohen of Warsaw. After him Rabbi Yerachmiel Yeshaya Mincberg ("The Rabbi of Luków") and Rabbi Aharon Wajnberg (towards the end of the 19th century).

The Jewish merchants and manufacturers made a significant contribution to the development of the city. Wholesale merchants conducted business with large cities in Russia as well as in other countries. Thus, for example, documents of the time mention the export of eggs and sugar to Germany.

Gersztajn, the community leader, owned a large manufacturing plant for processing copper parts and accessories, which were used in the local sugar factories and brandy distilleries. Twenty-five laborers worked in this plant. Gersztajn also owned a fired brick factory and stone quarries in which mainly Polish laborers worked. Other Jewish entrepreneurs founded flour mills, saw mills, breweries for beer and a small factory that produced oil in Jędrzejów. The first tailor in the community was G. Hersz, and the first carpenters were the Brajtbort brothers. Besides them there were also bakers, glaziers, medics, cobblers and other artisans among the Jews of Jędrzejów. Several Jews functioned as agents (factors) of the large property owners near Jędrzejów and managed the acquisitions and exports of the estates. By the end of the 19th century, most of the Jews of the city were already established and their businesses flourished; they bought property and built homes in the city.

The economic success drew additional Jews to Jędrzejów, the community grew and lively public Jewish life developed there. In 1902-3 the first Zionist group that was associated, ideologically, with the "Odessa Committee", which emphasized settling in the Land of Israel was active in Jędrzejów.

Jews were also active in the socialist camp. During the 1905 revolution the city was caught up in tremendous activity, and socialist parties and movements were organized among the Jews as well: the "Bund", a Jewish sector of the Polish Socialist Party (PPS), the party of the "Socialist Zionists" (ZS) and the new Zionist-Socialist party led by Dov Ber Borochov ("Di Yidishe Socialistishe Democratishe Partei"), which had already established its branch in Jędrzejów in 1906.

The activists from the Zionist and socialist movements also encouraged cultural life in the community. In 1909, the first public library was founded in Jędrzejów. The library quickly became a center for all of the social-political and cultural activity of the Jewish youth in Jędrzejów.

In 1915, during World War I, Jędrzejów fell into the hands of the Austrians. At first, the conquerers forbade any social, cultural or political activity and the library closed. In 1916, the restrictions on the cultural and social activities of the inhabitants were removed and the library also reopened. A drama circle was established in conjunction with the library, and the income from its performances was dedicated to developing the library, and there was also a special appeal made for the same purpose. According to the instructions of the Austrian occupation forces, elections were held for the community committee. The Austrians divided the inhabitants into three groups of income – merchants, artisans, and clerks and those in the free professions. Each one of these groups sent representatives to a body that was appointed to prepare the voter lists and to present the lists of the voters and the candidates to the authorities. The community prepared for the elections, but in the meantime the war ended, the Austrians retreated and Jędrzejów returned to Polish hands.

In the first months after the renewal of Polish rule there was anarchy in Jędrzejów, and the Jews suffered from it more than anyone else. At the end of November 1918, Polish anti-Semites attacked the Jewish inhabitants of the city. In response, Jewish self-defense organized in the city that succeeded in putting an end to the riots. The anti-Semitic activists did not give up and attempted to hurt the Jews in other ways. They began a vigorous campaign and called for an economic boycott against the Jews, but at that point they were not yet successful, since the farmers of the area remained loyal to the Jewish merchants.

In 1920, a bank of Jewish merchants and artisans was founded in Jędrzejów. The Polish cooperative institutions that were established at this time to aid the Polish merchants and artisans constituted serious competition for the Jewish merchants and artisans. The Jews of Jędrzejów decided to imitate their competitors and in 1925, a Jewish Cooperative Bank was established in Jędrzejów which served the entire public, from the merchants to the large and small artisans. Every Jew was able to get a loan from the bank on easy terms in order to create a source of income for himself.

The boycott campaign of the anti-Semites and the anti-Semitic policies of the Polish government in the areas of the economy, as well as the heavy taxes that they levied upon the Jews, destabilized their economic situation. Many of the Jews of Jędrzejów then sought ways to immigrate to countries overseas. In the 1930s, the economic situation worsened even more, but the opportunities of emigration and moving to the Land of Israel grew continually smaller.

In this period, polarization grew among the members of the community. The struggle was mainly between the supporters of "Agudat Yisra'el" and the Zionists. The battle became so fierce that the two camps did not shy away from any means, including informing to the authorities and provoking violence. In 1924, a private fight in Jędrzejów turned into a bitter public struggle with political overtones. During a party that some young people, members of "Agudat Yisra'el", were holding in their "shtibl", they got drunk and their shouts disturbed the neighbors. The sons of a feather merchant who lived nearby attempted to calm the drunkards, but they were beaten. Those involved in the fight used improvised "weapons" from whatever came to hand and a 15 year old youth, one of the "Aguda" members, was injured and later died of his injuries. The "Aguda" newspaper, Der Yid, headed the article that it published "The Zionists murdered an Aguda youth in Jędrzejów because of election campaigning". This episode made the Polish anti-Semites very happy, and venomously mocking articles appeared in the Polish press decrying the Jews. The rumours spread all over Poland and served as incitement material in the hands of the rival camps. The entire Jewish public split into factions. The Zionist institutions came out with a sharp condemnation of the plot and the rabbi of the city, Rabbi Yechiel Yeshaya Wajnberg, sent a vigorous denial to the Jewish newspapers Der Tag and Moment, and published the accurate story of what had happened. However, the protests, the denials and the counter-denials continued for many days, and even after it was clear that the plot was far from the facts, it continued to bubble for years and arouse hatred between the "Aguda" people and the Zionists in the community.

In the elections to the community committee that were held in 1920, "Agudat Yisra'el" made great efforts to preserve its premier standing in the community; its campaign publications included pieces such as "The Zionists and the Mizrachi want to turn the Study Halls into Theaters", or "The Torah forbids voting for Zionist Criminals". However, the results of the elections proved that "Agudat Yisra'el" had lost its birthright. The lists of the Zionists and the "Mizrachi" together received 7 seats on the committee and "Agudat Yisra'el" received just 5. The representatives of the Jewish artisans did not define themselves politically, which led to an unclear situation. In the elections in November 1932, the rule in the community institutions moved finally into the hands of the Zionists. The national-Zionist bloc, which was made up of the Zionist parties, the Zionist artisans and the "Mizrachi" received 5 seats and "Agudat Yisra'el" received just 3. The "Mizrachi" representative, I. Ickowicz, was elected to the position of community leader. The Polish authorities confirmed the results of the community elections and the community was lead by the Zionist bloc until the outbreak of World War II.

Zionist activity in Jędrzejów had grown stronger even before the Zionists were elected to the community committee. In 1931, a convention of all the members of the Zionist movement in the Kielce district was held in Jędrzejów.

In the elections to the 16th Zionist Congress (in 1929), the "Al HaMishmar" list received 23 votes, "Et Livnot" – 38 votes, "HaMizrachi" – 176, the Revisionists – 12, and the "Hit'achdut" – 5 votes. As a result of these elections, a branch of the "Torah vaAvodah" [Torah and Labor] movement was founded in the city, as well as the association of the Religious Zionist Artisans. These Religious-Zionist organizations, together with the other Zionist organizations in the city, developed a broad range of Zionist action in the areas of Hebrew culture, and held appeals for the Jewish National Fund. The Zionists put special emphasis on pioneer training and moving to the Land of Israel. The training sessions were organized by the pioneer youth movements that were active in Jędrzejów – "Hashomer HaTza'ir", "HeChalutz", "HeChalutz Hatza'ir", "HaNo'ar HaTzioni", "Tzi'irei Mizrachi" and "Hashomer Hadati". In 1934, a branch of "Beitar" was established in Jędrzejów.

In the early 1920s, a Hebrew school of the "Yavneh" chain opened in Jędrzejów. During this period a Jewish library also operated in the community named for A.N. Jawec [Yavetz].

The rabbi of the community at this time was Rabbi Yechiel Yeshaya Wajnberg, the son of Rabbi Aharon Wajnberg. He perished in the Shoah. There was a Chassidic Admo"r in Jędrzejów as well, Rabbi Itzak Shlomo Szapira, son of Rabbi Shalom of Przytyk ("The Rebbe of Sobków").

During World War II

On September 14th, 1939, ten days after Jędrzejów had been conquered by the Germans, 10 of the respected members of the community and its leaders, among them the rabbi of the city, were taken hostage. They were released only after a ransom of a quarter of a million zloty was paid from the funds of the Jewish community. After several days, 3 Jews who were innocently crossing the street were shot by German soldiers. At the end of September 1939, the German occupation authorities published a decree confiscating all places of business, manufacturing plants, factories and flour mills owned by Jews, including their furnishings. Other Jewish property was also confiscated and real estate was transferred to the oversight and ownership of the occupation authorities.

In February 1940, the Germans demanded the establishment of a Judenrat [Jewish Council] in Jędrzejów. Tajtlbaum was appointed chairman of the Judenrat, and Kasinski and Kamerat were members of it. The Judenrat was a mediating body between the institutions of the German authority and the local Jewish population as well as that of the entire area. In June 1940, the governor of Jędrzejów district published a decree regarding the establishment of a ghetto open to the Jews of the city. Every day Jews were kidnapped from the ghetto for forced labor, and as part of this they were humiliated, beaten and even shot. In December 1940, a decree was published that required all of the Jews who had beards to shave them off "in order to preserve their health" (in the words of the decree). That same month the Germans confiscated warm clothing and furs from the Jews. The life in the ghetto became more difficult from day to day and it became more and more crowded after Jews from the surrounding cities were also brought there. Hunger, cold and disease reigned in the ghetto. At the beginning it was still possible to leave the ghetto to obtain food, and aid was received from Jews abroad, and especially from the Joint Distribution Committee. But in March 1942, the ghetto was closed and surrounded by a barbed wire fence, and the commerce with the non-Jewish inhabitants was forbidden and came to a halt. Within the ghetto the hunger grew stronger and the mortality rates were very high.

In May 1942, the Germans demanded from the Judenrat a list of Jews who were active in the left-wing parties, their friends and relatives. The Judenrat handed over a list with 16 names. After a few days, the head of the Judenrat and his family members, some other Judenrat members and the 16 people whose names appeared on the list were arrested. They were all sent to Kielce (cf.) and from there to Auschwitz.

In August 1942, Jews from the surrounding countryside were brought into the Jędrzejów ghetto and the crowding reached its peak. The Jewish police, which had been established back in July 1941 on the command of the German governor, received strict instructions to preserve order.

On September 15th, 1942, S.S. and German policemen surrounded the ghetto along with Ukrainian policemen. They conducted searches in the houses and the inhabitants of the ghetto were commanded to report the following day at 8 a.m. in the market square in the ghetto. At the appointed hour most of the Jews gathered in the square; the Germans repeated their search of the houses; those who were not capable of coming out were shot on the spot. From among those gathered the Germans removed 250 who had the required professions and gave them special documents. Among them were three members of the Judenrat and 25 members of the Jewish police and their families. These people were separated from the rest of the Jews and allowed to remain in the ghetto. The remainder, numbering 4,556, were marched to the train station and crammed into freight cars, in terrible crowding and under threats, beatings, humiliations and torture. No one knew where they were being sent. On September 17th, 1942, the trains arrived at Treblinka. As soon as they arrived, the women were separated from the men and put into the gas chambers first, when the murder of the women was finished, the men were also put in there, except 50 men who were taken to sort the possessions of those murdered.

In the Jędrzejów ghetto, a group of Jewish laborers remained, which numbered 230 people. They were housed in small homes and the area was fenced in with barbed wire. This place was given the name the "Small Ghetto". After about a year, on September 2nd, 1943, the "Small Ghetto" was surrounded by the S.S. and German policemen and Ukrainian policemen. The Jews were led to the market square, but without their belongings. In the square, their oppressors abused them, beating many of them, and 62 people were shot there. The rest were sent on the same day to the labor camp at Skarzysko-Kamienna (cf.). The workers from Jędrzejów were nearly all employed in the munitions factory.

Of the 4,500 Jews of Jędrzejów before the war, only 80 survivors remained at its end – 57 who survived in the labor camps; 11 who hid in hiding places; and 12 who escaped to the Soviet Union and who returned after the war.

The Jews of Jędrzejów 1862-1914
Part II:Participation of the Jews in the Economic Life of the Town

by Stanisław Wiech

"Żydzi Jędrzejowa 1862-1914 II. Udział Żydów jędrzejowskich z życiu gospardarczym miastecztka"
An article from Biuletyn Żydowskiego Instytutu Historycznego w Polsce
BŻIH, #181 (1997 #1), pages 3-13

Translated from the Polish by Gordon McDaniel
Edited by Warren Blatt

The demographic changes in Jędrzejów engendered by the increasing influence of Jews after 1862 were closely connected with economic transformation. Uncovering and describing these interdependences, we should find that removal of the restrictions on Jewish settlement caused a greater change in the economic life of Jędrzejów than in the religious makeup of the inhabitants itself. That was a result, primarily, of the economic activity of the Jewish newcomers, whose decisiveness in the economic arena outpaced that of the permanent residents, i.e., the Christian inhabitants of the town.

The first Jewish settlers, who arrived in Jędrzejów in the pre-emancipation period and settled after receiving special permission, supported themselves by means of rents that they had obtained through auction or commission from the city authorities. The list of occupations of the early settlers fully confirms the types of financial support of the pre-emancipation Jews who were allowed to inhabit a place fortified by the privilege "de non tolerandis Judaeis": paving streets, renting a taproom or slaughterhouse in town. Most likely, the bids from the Jews were most useful for the town. The first settler in town was a "leaseholder of consumption", i.e., taproom, which according to ever increasing criticism from public and state administration milieux, was entrusted to Jews. This was not an isolated case, where, for example, in Kielce during the period before emancipation, leaseholding of taprooms and even the office of "scribe of consumption" were put into the hands of the Jews.[1] The transfer of leaseholding of taprooms to the Jews confirmed among the Christian population the stereotype of the Jewish saloon-keeper, the leaseholder of taverns and inns.

The choice of means of support for Jews living in Jędrzejów in the period before emancipation was very restricted. That situation changed after 1862 when the prohibition was removed on permanent residency in town, acquisition of real estate and opening of shops and workshops. After 1862, there arrived in Jędrzejów a succession of various types of merchants, shopkeepers, vendors, agents and tradesmen. On the other hand, in the early years of settlement one can observe a lesser number of artisans, people engaged in specialized professions or persons who had uncommon qualifications.

The decisive predominance among settlers of those engaged in commerce and trade arose primarily because, as opposed to artisanry, these occupations did not depend on long-term investments (materials, tools, workshops, etc.) and brought significantly quicker return on investments. It is not without significance for the range of professions among settlers that Jędrzejów fulfilled certain economic functions in the local market. A great role in the life of the town was played by the great markets held twice a year[2] where the main items of trade were horses and agricultural products. Even in the period before emancipation, a great influence of Jews into sales and transactions at various kinds of markets in Jędrzejów was obvious. It can be assumed that this situation became even more obvious after 1862. Ten years after the emancipation act, the readers of Gazeta Kielecka were emphatically informed about the situation that "the general market in Jędrzejów, held on St. Michael's (Day), which was supposed to start on October 4, but because of a holiday [Sukkoth] for the Jews, without whose participation there cannot be a general market, the market will barely last into next week."[3]

There was an analogous influence of Jewish settlement on the process of economic development in small towns such as Bodzentyn, Miechów and Kielce. From the perspective of a decade of Jewish settlement in Kielce, the head of the Kielce Gubernia, evaluating the economic transformation of the gubernia capital emphasized, among other things, "the influx of Jews into Kielce (which earlier enjoyed the privilege De non tolerandis Judaeis) positively influenced development of the town, primarily due to business activity."[4] Similar attention was given by a correspondent of Gazeta Kielecka, who in 1888 informed his readers that Bodzentyn "a long-time agricultural town, now has become a town of trade"[5] and that result was intensified after 1862 due to Jewish settlement.

The issue of penetration of a significant number of Jewish businessmen and tradesmen into new small towns, which was frequently cited in the press and official reports on the economic situation of the gubernia, was usually interpreted from two different positions. The reports of Russian administrative officials accentuated the general economic development of small towns as a consequence of the influx of new settlers. The Polish press, however, especially that of a Catholic hue, moaned over the socioeconomic changes caused by the sudden activization of Jewish business, or over the losses to Christian businesses associated with it. However, it was emphasized by both positions, that the great majority of Jewish settlers engaged in business and trade were in the category of poor people having little, and in general lacking investment capital and were satisfied with the smallest profit. Among the settlers, it was noted, there was a lack of rich merchants and the wealthiest businessmen, who rarely decided to change their town residency for settlement. The statement in Gazeta Kielecka from 1872 is characteristic: "Which of the oldest residents of Kielce has not seen in recent years an enormous influx of Jews into the city? Omitting (the small number of) merchants and tradesmen who deal in various types of goods and earn an honest living, among the Jews there is a mass of locusts having no steady employment and which, like air, forces its way into the most minute relations of our (Christian) daily life and draws benefit from every word. In this category are vendors of all sorts of goods... . These vendors, like locusts, fly out very early in every road leading into the city and gather from peasants going to market the greater part of the produce the latter carry, and then sell it to us at their own inflated prices."[6] This was a completely new form of intervention in the exchange of goods between everyone in the city. The practice of Jews buying goods from peasants and offering them in markets of small towns was widespread not only in the vicinity of Kielce[7] but also in other regions. In accordance with this practice, as the Gazeta Kielecka adds, "in every settlement, at daybreak of a market day Jewish men and women come out in a Jewish vanguard several viorsts from the town and accost (peasants) carrying butter, eggs, cheese, chickens, ducks, and the like to sell."[8]

Investment in a market stall, booth or little shop required a much greater outlay, and so was a less common occurrence. Over the course of several years the systematic influx of moderately wealthy tradesmen and merchants, however, created in Jędrzejów a relatively stable group of Jewish petit bourgeouis that strengthened its economic position. Often the path to the category of quite prosperous merchant and tradesman started from the position of small businessman or shopkeeper who got along well in a new environment and so set down roots in a new small town. "Almost daily -- we are informed in the middle of the (18)70s quite sarcastically -- a new family of our most dearly beloved arrives (in Jędrzejów), opens a new shop in which you will find goods for just a few rubles, but in a couple of years the shop expands, other types of goods arrive, and in a few years a small tenement-house is bought."[9]

The economic stabilization of small trademen and merchants, expressed in the movement of capital into real estate, shops and warehouses, caused changes in the ownership structure of small-town residents. Most obvious was the change in ownership structure in the central areas of small towns, i.e., in the market square and streets leading to it. "In the settlement of Jędrzejów," it is written in 1878, "during a period of 14 years Jews came into possession of the most magnificent buildings on the square, a third of which are already their property."[10] Some years later the following notation stated this point more precisely: "The owners of the most magnificent buildings on the square and on the main streets are 26 Jewish families."[11] In comparison with the total number of Jewish residents of Jędrzejów, however, the group of rich "estate owners" was not large, being somewhat less than 10% of the total Jewish population.

After several years of settlement, at the beginning of the 20th century, a description of Jędrzejów emphasized that "there are many shops and small stores (Jewish) in town, a few in every building, but of Christian shops, alarmingly, there remain only five"[12]. A similar change took place in Bodzentyn, where it was written that during the twenty-five years from the emancipation proclamation "buildings on both of the squares and on the streets leading up to them were almost all owned by Jews"[13]. Shops, taprooms and workshops located in them became the basis of economic stimulation of the town, which "from a purely agricultural town had become one of business."

Following businessmen, merchants, wholesalers and brokers to Jędrzejów there came artisans, day laborers and small producers. At first their goal was to satisfay the needs of their fellow Jews, and so the number of Jewish artisans in town was quite restricted. Later, the profile of goods and services by artisans was carefully shaped to meet the needs of the Christian residents of Jędrzejów. This development took place in almost every small town in which Jewish settlement began to grow after 1862. It was not a coincidence that in Kielce, Jędrzejów, Bodzentyn, Miechów and other small towns that among the first artisans to open their workshops were bakers and butchers. In both cases the choice was dictated by the nature of the religion, which required a kosher kitchen.

The appearance of Jewish bakers and butchers at the markets of small towns greatly unsettled Christian domination of these trades, and in short order, under conditions of rivalry and competition, a decisive change in the religious structure of these trades took place. At the beginning of the 1890s in Kielce, out of 20 bakers, 15 were Jewish, while Jews made up only 25% of the town's population.[14] In Jędrzejów in 1875, Jews prevailed in the baking trade, where of 16 bakers 10 were Jewish and only 6 were Christian.[15]

Besides bakers and butchers who were meeting the needs primarily of fellow Jews, other artisans began to arrive, such as tailors, capmakers, furriers, tanners, shoemakers, etc. Among Christians, a broader circle of customers found Jewish furriers, shoemakers and tanners. The economic expansion of Jewish artisans in small towns was very limited by the sharp reaction of Christian artisans who had means of applying pressure, such as organizations of workshops and councils of elders.[16] Workshop organizations, legally before 1862 and by custom after emancipation, gathered together only Christian artisans, which greatly facilitated the economic conflict between Christian masters of "workshops" and the Jewish "botchers" that came to small towns. In the case of Jędrzejów, the numerous coppersmiths, saddlers, carpenters, painters, shoemakers, metalworkers, smiths and tailors tried to block the expansion of Jewish artisans, although in the second half of the 19th century only three groups of artisans organized themselves into unions: carpenters, shoemakers and smiths.[17]

At the beginning of the 1880s Jewish settlers, estimated at 521 (14.8% of the total population), had played, after less than 20 years since the emancipiation proclamation, a far greater role in the economic life of the town than would have been suggested by their share of the total population. Among the artisans of the town, Jewish masters were 20-25%, while in some trades they were in greater numbers than Christian

One can see from the table above that of the 69 shops, taprooms and inns, 50 (or 72.5%) were owned by Jews. The most profitable businesses (wine shops, sweets shop and inns) were owned, however, by Poles.

A similar situation is found amoung the owners of smaller artisan establishments, which in the smallest towns could be counted on the fingers of one hand. In Jędrzejów, these were a small factory producing agricultural tools, an oil mill, a brewery, a plant producing stove tiles, and a brick factory. Of the owners of these five establishments, three were Jews (see Table 3).

Economic development, as we saw in Jędrzejów after 1862, was a consquence of the economic activity not only of Jews settled in the town, but also of Jews who only on occasion and temporarily were in Jędrzejów. They were brought into Jędrzejów primarily by the branch of the Bank of Poland and the two annual fairs (St. Michael and St. John). Press reports indicate that the annual fairs brought to Jędrzejów more prosperous Jewish merchants from Żarki, Łowicz, Włodzimierz, Pilica, Skrzynno, Kielce, Działoszyce and other cities and towns. Most of them engaged in transactions worth a few thousand or tens of thousands of rubles. The fairs also brought to Jędrzejów local peasants, hoping for a good market for agricultural products brought about by the growing economic development of the town.[18] The Jędrzejów fairs took place, as we have already mentioned, with significant participation by Jews and stimulated the small shopkeepers, agents and handicraft artisans among the Jews residing in town to collect grain, wool, livestock, eggs, feathers, horses, produced shoes, clothing, etc. to meet the needs of larger merchants, wholesalers and rich brokers.

As time passed, the annual fairs became less important in the exchange of goods in favor of a better developed network of business centers in the region (warehouses, wholesale establishments, storehouses, etc.), although in an agricultural and economically backward region like the Kielce Gubernia, fairs continued to play an important role in economic life. Annual fairs also obviously came under the influence of changes in the economic market. During the crisis in the mid-1870s "Jędrzejów fairs declined into the ranks of ordinary markets, [where] the value of horses supplied by Jewish businessmen from Zarek, Pilica and other villages did not exceed 20,000 rubles. Furthermore, the Jews presented choices of varying caliber, from which one could not approve of more than four or five. 'Shoemakers from Kielce were disappointed, they could trade goods worth only 300 rubles, while the value of all their goods was 8000 rubles. Saddle-making, rope-making and iron had a decent profit. The feather merchant from Radom had bad business, sitting on packets virtually unopened. Jewish shoemakers making boots had a fiasco"[19] Fifteen years later, when a complete stop in business and stagnation in industry was observed, the annual fairs in Jędrzejów again were marked by low profits. "The St. John's horse fair in Jędrzejów," one reads, "was very poor in terms of turnover. Only a few foreign businessmen came to the market, and even these held back from major purchases because of low prices. The fair was restricted to only two days. Various traders came to the fair with goods, but they did not recover travel expenses due to the complete lack of buyers."[20]

"The local economic situation," one could read in 1888, "is leading to a worsening in society. In the settlement of Jędrzejów, several stallkeepers, fabric shops, grocers and taprooms supported by Jews had to close their establishments in the new year due to a total halt to trade and loss of credit."[21] Ignoring, however, periodic breaks and crises in the economy, economic life in Jędrzejów shortly became, to a great degree, dependent on the professional activities of Jewish settlers. This dependence was emphasized by the very appearance of the settlement, in which Christians worked largely in agriculture, with a small number of artisans or other occupations, while the Jewish minority was engaged in business and trade. As noted in 1875, "Other than market day, when life pulsates, we are plunged into a dead silence. On the square and in the streets of town move about only our Jewish brothers, or bureaucrats and artisans in their workshops, while peasants are in the field working."[22]

An important impulse to the economic life of Jędrzejów, as well as to the town's Jews, was the construction in the mid-1880s of a rail line connecting Deblin with Dąbrowa Gornicza. It ran through Radom, Kielce, Jędrzejów and Olkusz. Jędrzejów was opened to the world. This caused great changes in the town, in economic as well as social, cultural and architectural terms. These changes were described in an interesting way by a correspondent of Gazeta Kielecka, who wrote in 1891: "The opening of the railroad six years ago brought about changes in business relations and introduced complete chaos and confusion into a quiet small town. On any given day, lime from Kielce is provided by Brest, and stone from Kiev, while wood from Jędrzejów goes to Wroclaw, grain from Miechów goes to Berlin, eggs go to Hamburg and London and vice versa. Olkusz has matches from Smolensk, hemp from Bessarabia, Pacanow has wine from Crimea. In this general upheaval, furthermore, some villagers profit, others decline, depending on their greater or lesser productivity. Those most affected materially are small manufacturers and artisans who have little talent for business. [...] The largest number in this category are poorer because of the improved communications with centers of industrial life, where goods are better, cheaper and more fashionable. [...] Profiting from this are the Jews. From impoverished robed individuals they have grown into financial potentates, and with innate thrift and diligence they gradually take hold of the helm of industrial interests."[23] While the opening of the railroad at first subjected the market of Jędrzejów to a particular penetration of general competition, with attendant personal financial crises[24] with the passing of time that trend reversed itself.

The opening of the train station had its effects not only on the boom in town, but also on the increased influx of new settlers, who were searching along the rail line for ways to support themselves.

As stated by Menachem Mendel Horowitz, a resident of Jędrzejów: "together with the building of the train station, Jews began to arrive in Jędrzejów in masses from neighboring small towns [...] and so near the train station there were built large warehouses to keep goods arriving in Jędrzejów and being sent on to other places by local merchants."[25] While the train station was under construction thanks to investment by the state, new possibilities were opened for Jewish artisans. Sheet metal work during construction was given to Lemel Blacharz (Rubinsztajn), a son of a sheet-metal worker from Wodzisław, who came to Jędrzejów in the mid-1870s. "He knew his craft so well," it was written about Rubinsztajn, " that well into old age he remained the master of sheet-metal work in the Directorate of Railroads in the region, and so received from the imperial government a monthly pension."[26]

The railroad brought special benefit to businessmen, vendors, merchants, wholesalers and factory owners. One of the more prominent business agents who invested in business activities around the train station in Jędrzejów was Mendel Werthajm, who came from Zarki (Piotrkow Gubernia) with many relatives, bought several plots of land around the train station and built a series of warehouses and fuel depots. He quickly made connections with the great Łódź industrialist Izrael Poznańsky, who owned the property Nieznanowice in far away Włoszczowa. M. Werthajm became the most prosperous businessman in Jędrzejów, and plenipotentiary at the Jędrzejów train station for I. K. Poznańsky. The shipping firm of Werthajm also made use of rail connections to make business contacts with great industrialists in Russia.

After the rail line was opened, the activities of Jędrzejów merchants was concentrated primarily on the trade of agricultural products. To meet the needs of large wholesalers and merchants, small businessmen and brokers gathered grain from local farmers and peasants to send to distant markets. As M. Horowitz noted, "the first great grain merchants in Jędrzejów were Meir Ahronson, called 'Meir Warszawer,' Mosze Lejb Horowitz and Enzel Horowitz, who came from Wodzisław. They associated themselves with the large grain firm "Kapelman and Son" from St. Petersburg, that owned breweries and bought the greater part of their barley in the Kingdom. The director of the firm, Turbowicz (?) [the question mark is in the original], upon his arrival in Jędrzejów and evaluation of the quality of the barley from the area, ordered tens of wagons, leaving an advance payment and instructions to ship the goods to Russia through the Werthajm firm and its warehouses. The Kapelman firm sent its own officials to Jędrzejów to manage this shipping. [...] Jędrzejów revived at that time, with new means of earning income opening up. [...] Jekutial Rozenberg, called "Confectioner," opened a hotel in town for guests in general and country gentlemen from the region, who became engaged in providing barley for the Russian market."[27]

Information about the influence of the Kapelman Company on the economic life of the town is also confirmed by a correspondent of Gazeta Kielecka, who in 1893 described transactions in Jędrzejów: "The merchant Kapelman came to Jędrzejów, but did not go to the market. However, immediately a host of Jewish businessmen and brokers surrounded him and did not let him out of his lodgings. Kapelman concluded with them agreements for four years, and left. After his departure, a whole legion of an organized group of Jewish businessmen stuck together to buy barley for 60-70 kopecks under Warsaw prices."[28] Similar [24] A similar phenomenon was observed in Kielce. It was noted at the beginning of the 1890s: "Kielce sustained the greatest losses because of the fiscal crisis of villages and bankrupcy among merchants" caused by the opening of the railroad. The losses were calculated at about half a million rubles; Gazeta Kielecką 1891, no. 52.

accomplishments in the area of export, in this case eggs for the German market, were carried out by Joab Zylbersztajn, who also monopolized the sugar trade in Jędrzejów.[29]

A description of Jędrzejów in 1895 vividly details the results of this economic boom: "In Jędrzejów, because of the railroad, the number of inhabitants increased, primarily Jewish. Jews, because of their thrift, became owners of half of the settlement. All the stone buildings on the market square, with small exceptions, belonged to Jews. On Sabbath well-dressed Jews push through the streets, pot-bellied Jews waddle along with books under their arms on the way to synagogue, a herd of Jewish children play joyfully on the streets, accosting passersby with their shouts. And the reason for all this wealth is business. The liveliness that the Jews have, their enterprise and solidarity, in the end, we (Christians) should rely on more."[30] That last remark is so accurate, in that the economic development of Jędrzejów, made more dynamic by putting the railroad into service, exposed the minimal participation, with slight exceptions, of the Polish middle class in these changes. Among the greater merchants, brokers, wholesalers, as well as industrialists, who owed their success to investments begun in Jędrzejów, only a small percentage were Christian, which accentuated even more the influence of Jewish settlers on the changed economic situation of Jędrzejów.

We must look primarily for the reason for the weak activity of Christians in this regard to the difficulty of access to cheap credit. Some representatives of the Polish landed nobility, thanks in large part to their personal efforts and economic contacts with Jewish merchants, actively participated in the exchange of goods in Jędrzejów after 1885. For example, the Radziwills, owners of an estate in nearby Naglowice, decided after long support to sell a considerable holding of forestland to Jewish merchants (chiefly Izrael Rozenberg), who joined with Christians from Bedzin to form an association to provide "prop wood" to the mines of the Dąbrowa Basin and to Germany. After several years, the largest participant in that association, I. Rozenberg, moved to Łódź where he began activity as a factory owner. The Radziwill forests also gave Moszko Blumenkranc an opportunity to enrich himself by producing turpentine, resin, and primarily, charcoal sent by the wagonloads to Łódź, where it was used by local tailors for their irons.

Jewish merchants from Jędrzejów bought wood from monastery forests and processed it in local sawmills. Likewise, the Potocky forests from the Chwilin estate, about 20 km from Jędrzejów, soon became the property of Jewish entrepreneurs, who then decided to build a narrow-gauge railroad to the train station.[31] As can be seen, the economic activity of Polish landed gentry was limited in these cases to the sale of natural resources they owned, and was thus disposed more to quick profit than to long-term investment and development of an industrial base for the processing of agricultural products and natural resources. An exception was the Wielowiejsky family, which owned a great deal of property in the vicinity of Jędrzejów, resided permanently in St. Petersburg, and built a malt-house near the train station in Jędrzejów, which drew great barley merchants to Jędrzejów. Stefan Wielowiejski, who also depended on economic cooperation with Jewish merchants and industrialists for the industrialization of his properties, earned great sympathy among the Jews of Jędrzejów.

The volume of business sales or profits of the Jews of Jędrzejów was significant for small-town conditions. The value of goods stored in warehouses or shipped was in the tens of thousands of rubles. When the barley warehouse of Chaim D. Sobol, known as a middle-rank merchant, burned in 1911, the value of the barley stored (about 12 wagons) was given as 25 thousand rubles. Ch. Sobol was also a wholesaler of salt and oil. Diversified trade was recognized as a means of security in the face of cataclysms and crises. This merchant's business sales totaled 50 to 60 thousand rubles.[32]

As a result of economic development in the 1880s and 1890s, Jędrzejów had been transformed by the beginning of the 20th century from a purely agricultural town to one of industry based primarily on the processing of agricultural products and serving the local market.

Just in the area of processing forest products there arose at the turn of the 20th century a dozen or so Jewish firms, which in comparison with other small towns of the region made Jędrzejów a phenomenal exception. In addition to the firms already mentioned of Werthajm, Rozenberg and Sobol, one should mention the names of other settlers who should be recognized for their part in the economic development of Jedrezjow, such as Mendl Nunberg from Bedzin, Wolf Spirytus from Radoszyce, Iser Zelman from Wolbrom, Szlamo Gasierowicz from Radomsko, Mosze Bresler, Mosze Blumenkranc, Symcha Binem Werdygier, Zelig Maner, Mosze Tajtelbojm, Jenkl Rokoszyner, Abraham Stobiekci, Chaim Enoch, Meir Ahronson, Szlomo Rozen from Skarzysko and others.[33]

Jewish capitalists were also important in the mining and metal industries. Three gypsum factories were built in town: one by the Warsaw firm of Mendl Hamer "Alabaster"; the second by the local financial potentate Mendel Werthajm, who for this purpose started a joint-stock company with M. Goldhaar, a wealthy resident of Kielce; the third was started by the Rzedowky family, who came from Dzialoszyce (the factory was later taken over by Mordechaj Grajcer from Miechów, who with the financial assistance of Tewy Marinem and Josef Frydman from Działoszyce, operated until the outbreak of the First World War).

The small metalworking factories that existed earlier, directed primarily to the production of less complicated agricultural machinery and field tools, and owned by Poles, soon were enriched by Jewish capital. The first factory that was competitive compared to the Polish foundry and agricultural machine factory, being the property of Kirsztajn, was the factory founded by Dawid Riterband. The greatest producer in that area, however, was Józef Dikerman, who arrived in 1908, who first opened a blacksmith's shop producing horseshoes, with the help of his sons and sons-in-law. This poorly outfitted shop in which all the members of the family worked under primitive conditions over time became the largest metalworking factory in Jędrzejów. Dikerman was the first in Jędrzejów to base his production on electricity and the newest machines from Germany, which allowed the mechanization of the foundry. This factory later became the basis of the larger factory "Metal-Pol".[34] Of lesser significance was the production of the metalworking factory "Mlot", which was moved to Jędrzejów from Konske, and was the property of Mendl Cukier who had come from Wodzisław.

The foundation of economic development in Jędrzejów, created thanks to the industrial initiatives of Jewish settlers, continued. Even the difficult years of the First World War did not cause the activities of existing firms and factories to cease. In the interwar years as well, the influences that caused the economic development of Jędrzejów at the turn of the 20th century were still visible. The majority of the establishments at that time, industrial factories ("Metal-Pol," "Mlot," "Alabaster"), sawmills, other mills, warehouses and depots, owed their creation and development to the economic initiatives began long before the First World War. One should not overestimate the role of Jewish settlers in the economic changes that took place in Jędrzejów, the settlers, who, as confirmed by personal sources and memoirs, were not only pioneers in the creation of the Jewish community of Jędrzejów, but also in building the industrial infrastructure of the town with which they had decided to cast their future. And the skills, contacts and capital obtained in Jędrzejów were later invested in new, larger and more attractive settlements.

Jędrzejów – 1929 Business Directory Entries

Transcribed by Warren Blatt

Transcribed below are the entries for Jędrzejów from the 1929 Polish business directory Księga Adresowa Polski (Wraz z w.m. Gdańskiem) dla Handlu, Przemysłu Rzemiosł i Rolnictwa [Directory of Poland (including Gdańsk) for trade, industry, handicraft and agriculture], (Warszawa, 1929), pages 213-214. For more information about this directory, see Kielce-Radom SIG Journal IV:1 (Winter 2000), pages 27-29.

The directory is organized by province, then by town, and then by occupation within each town. The occupations are listed alphabetically in Polish (except for the first few officials and medical/legal professions), with French translation following.

For this transcript, I have alphabetized the entries by surname, with the occupation heading as the second column. I've omitted some information, such as street names, business names, and the French and English translations of the occupation headings. For the full original entries, see the page images online at < http://www.jewishgen.org/jri-pl/bizdir/start.htm >. We thank JRI-Poland for making these pages available.

Conferences, Concidences, Connections = Genealogy
My Shtetl, Ilza

Betty Provizer Starkman

For over twenty years I have been searching for fellow descendants of my shtetl Ilza (Drilge). My utopian dream has been to fence in the former (non-existent) Jewish Cemetery and to erect a single monument memorializing the ancient Jewish community. Some readers may recall my article and photos of the Destruction of Ilza Synagogue [Kielce-Radom SIG Journal I:1 (Winter 1997), pages 9-12]. Barbara Sontz returned several months ago from Ilza and phoned to tell me that the site of our former synagogue is now an empty lot. We canot allow the memory of our ancestors to be erased. We genealogists are insuring the recording and continuity of our long Jewish history and sojourn in Poland.

The 2002 IAJGS Conference in Toronto this August has turned my dream into a reality. At the Conference, Carolynn Veffer, of Toronto posted a notice on the board requesting Ilza/Drilge descendants to meet for lunch. Nine, primarily Canadians, attended and two arrived later. Prior to the Conference, I copied old photos from grandfather's album; gathered these along with recent photos, old postcards, old Ilza documents and copies of vital records. As we studied the menu, the photos were passed around. The first reaction was a shout and then tears. One of the attendees recognized her mother in the center of an old photo of the Jewish School. She had never seen a childhood picture of her mother. The school was established and built by my grandfather, Mayer Rachmiel Prowizor. Lunch was almost forgotten. Another attendee was able to identify her mother's former home on the Rynek [marketplace] in Ilza. Some passed around vital record copies, all signed by my great grandfather, Moishe Samet. We all discovered some degree of relationship to one another. It was both exciting and emotional.

Over lunch I broached the subject of restoration of the destroyed Ilza cemetery. To my surprise there was great enthusiasm. All agreed to be involved. They requested that I return to Toronto in December to meet with the Drilger landsmanschaft. Of course I agreed to do so.

Next I contacted the amazing Dr. Norman L.Weinberg, Executive Coordinator of PJCRP, Polish Jewish Cemetery Restoration Project. He was responsible for the restoration of the Ozarów cemetery [see K-R SIG Journal, V:4,28-29 and VI:1,24-26] and was a presenter at the 2002 IAJGS Conference. With his help our project became a reality. Dr. Weinberg gave us many suggestions and hired on our behalf, Andrzej Omasta, a Polish researcher. Within a week we had photos of the cemetery site, a research report, documentation of the cemetery, restoration suggestions and the unknown fact that there was a mass grave on the site. Through the miracle of cyberspace, all interested parties have communicated almost daily.

Mae Waese, president of the Toronto Drilger landsmanschaft, telephoned and invited me to address the next meeting on December 14, 2002. Her late father was a former president of the Drilger and she was very excited about the project. The assistance of the group was assured.

At the meeting I will broach several other ambitious projects. First, a group journey to Ilza to rededicate the cemetery, upon completion. This was accomplished with great success by Dr. Weinberg in Ozarow. The possibility of memorials to be established at the site of the mass grave and the former synagogue will be discussed. I will also present the thought of publishing a Yiskor Book, with chapters written by descendents and former residents.

It is amazing that this small group of descendents of Ilza have become like family. In reality, we are family. I have received invitations to Shabbat dinner, offers of housing and promises of airport pick up. Our ancestors are smiling down upon us.

The coincidences and connections made possible by the 2002 IAJGS Toronto Conference are what Jewish genealogy is made of.

Betty Provizer Starkman is the Founder of the JGS of Michigan. She resides in Bloomfield Hills, Michigan, and can be reached at <BetteJoy@aol.com>.

Notes:

1) Most Yiddish words have the stress on the first syllable. Most Polish words stress the next-to-last syllable.
2) Exception to #1: Town names ending in -in are usually stressed on the last syllable: Khentshin (Chęciny), Shtekotshin (Szczekociny), Zvolin (Zwoleń), Bendin (Będzin), Lublin (Lublin).
3) Polish Yiddish frequently de-voices 'v', so that e.g. Stashev is actually pronounced Stashef.

JRI-Poland - Radom and Starachowice Archives Project

by Jeffrey Geizhals
Archive Coordinator, Radom and Starachowice Archives

In late October, Stanley Diamond and Mark Halpern of Jewish Records Indexing-Poland made a surprise discovery when they visited the Radom Archives. In advance of the launch of a formal project to index the Jewish vital records in their archives – for those years not filmed by the LDS (Mormons) – the archives staff had already begun the process of photocopying all of its index pages. In addition, the archivists verified the entries in the indices against the actual records, thus assuring the highest degree of accuracy for subsequent indexing.

An agreement was quickly reached with the director of the Archives to purchase copies of these index pages. With an opportunity to move the Radom Archives project ahead much more quickly than anticipated, I volunteered to become the Archive Coordinator for this branch. At the same time, because of my interest in Ostrowiec Świętokrzyski in the Starachowice branch, I agreed to become Archive Coordinator for that project as well. Now all that remains for us to do is raise the money to fund the data entry and make the indices available on-line. The list of towns and records follows:

The Indexing Process

As index pages are received by the JRI-Poland data entry team in Warsaw, a count of the number of records of each type will be made and a fund-raising goal for each town will be established and posted to the JRI-Poland mailing list. After 50% of the fund-raising target has been reached, the actual data entry will start. The first town to meet the 50% goal will be the first town indexed! For the years 1868-1902, the records are in the Russian language. Data entry is done by the JRI-Poland team of professionals in Poland in Cyrillic and then converted automatically to the Polish form of the names using a transliteration standard accepted by the Polish State Archives.

Town Leaders

Town leaders play an indispensable role in JRI-Poland archive projects. Leaders are needed for all towns to drive the fundraising that makes a project successful. Without the funds to pay for the data entry, the work will not be done. Data entry cannot start until at least 50% of the fundraising target has been met. If you are interested in becoming a Town Leader or want more information on the Radom and Starachowice Project, please contact me at < jeffo@usa.net >.

Town Leaders who successfully fulfill the fundraising objective for their town will be eligible to obtain an Excel spreadsheet file with all the indices for their town. Donors making a qualifying contribution will also be eligible to obtain the Excel file. The amount of the qualifying contribution is set when the number of count of records is known.

JRI-Poland - Sandomierz Archives Project

by Suzanne S. Waxman
Archive Coordinator, Sandomierz Archives Project

The Sandomierz Archives Project of Jewish Records Indexing-Poland (JRI-Poland)/Polish State Archives has begun. There are Jewish registers for 15 towns in this archive: Annopol, Bogoria, Janow Lubelski, Klimontów, Koprzywnica, Krzeszów, Kurozwęki, Osiek, Ożarów, Połaniec, Sandomierz, Staszów, Tarłów, and Zawichost. These towns were formerly in southern Radom and western Lublin gubernias.

This branch of the state archives is located in the former synagogue at #4 ulica Zodowska, 27-600 Sandomierz, Poland. See Kielce Radom-SIG Journal III:3 (Summer 1999), pages 3-6, for more information, including an inventory and photographs of the archive.

As many know, JRI-Poland entered into an agreement in 1997 with the Polish State Archives (PSA) to index their Jewish vital records which have not been microfilmed by the LDS (Mormons). In the Sandomierz branch, the non-microfilmed records generally start in 1885 and go up to 1900. It is this time period that is critical to our research, because many of us have great-grandparents, grandparents and parents who lived in Poland during these years. The ability to access these indexes via the Internet will enable us to find previously unavailable records, and thus help us expand and perhaps complete our research for some of our families. Once funded and completed, the indices will be available in the JRI on line database at < http://www.jewishgen.org/JRI-PL >.

Before 1868 the records were kept in Polish and after that in Russian. The data is being entered in Cyrillic by the JRI-Poland team in Poland, and then converted by Michael Tobias, JRI-Poland's database manager, into the Latin alphabet. Contributors qualifying to receive the Excel spreadsheet for their town will be able to see both the Latin and original Russian entries.

The indices have been completed for the towns of Klimontów, Koprzywnica, Ożarów, Sandomierz, and Staszów. Indices for Opatów and Zawichost should be ready in early 2003.

In addition to being the Archive Coordinator, I'm also Town Leader for Ożarów and Sandomierz. Other Town Leaders who've already volunteered are listed in the table below. We still need Town Leaders for Bogoria, Krzeszów, Kurozwęki, Osiek, Połaniec, Tarłów, and Zawichost. If you're interested please e mail me at < sswnola@earthlink.net >. Town Leaders will be eligible to obtain the Excel spreadsheet as a thank you for all the time and effort that you've given to this project once you've met your goal.

Town Leaders are responsible for making an inventory of the existing LDS microfilms, if there are any, for that town in addition to raising funds for the data entry of the indices for their town. There are guidelines to follow and help from the Archive Coordinator whenever needed.

Once the inventories are completed, then photocopies of the index pages for the years not microfilmed by the LDS are ordered. There will be a count of the number of records in the indices, and both the fundraising goal and qualifying contribution will be set for the data entry for that town. At this point the Town Leaders start fundraising.

Besides an overall goal, which is different for each town, JRI-Poland establishes the "qualifying contribution". Donors making this minimum qualifying contribution will be eligible to obtain the Excel file for their own use.

Сандомиръ – Sandomierz

from Еврейская Энциклопедія [Evreiskaia Entsiklopediia = Jewish Encyclopedia]
(St. Petersburg: Brokhaus-Efron, 1906-1913), columns 932-934
Translated from the Russian by Gordon McDaniel

Сандомиръ Sandomir (in Polish, Sandomierz; at one time Sudomir, for example in Nestor [Russian chronicle] and in a papal bull of Eugenius III dated 1148; called Sodzmir or Cozmir צוזמיר [Tzuzmir] by the Jews, which perhaps indicates that Jews settled here at the time when the city was called Sudomir) – Was during the period of the Polish Commonwealth [Rzecz Pospolita, before 1795] a major trade city, administrative center of the Wojewodztwo [province] of the same name. The Jewish community in Sandomir is one of the oldest in Poland. When the Jews settled in Sandomir is not known with precision. Dlugosz mentioned a Jewish cemetery in Kawiory near Sandomir. About the Jews in Sandomir, it is known that in 1367 they came before Kazimierz the Great, together with the Jews of Kraków and Lvov, to have their general privileges confirmed. At the end of the 15th and beginning of the 16th centuries, the number of Jews in Sandomir was evidently significant. They were successful in trade, which was evidenced by hatred toward them of residents who obtained restrictions on the trading rights of the Jews. In the lustration [inspection] of 1602, there were 14 Jewish homeowners residing in Sandomir. During the reign of Sigismund III [1587-1632], an order was issued that no more than 11 Jewish families were to live in Sandomir (all on the Jewish street). In 1611, Jews owned 16 homes, and about that time the synagogue was constructed which still exists (see the illustration). During the Swedish-Polish War [1655-1660], Sandomir was captured by the Swedes, but at the end of March 1656 the Poles won it back, and many Jews perished, among them the rabbi Jakob; the Jews were expelled, which is evidenced, among other ways, by an elegy composed for that occasion. In 1658, King Jan II Kazimierz allowed Jews to return to Sandomir and freely engage in trade; a privilege to this effect was confirmed by subsequent kings: Michael Wisniowiecki (1669), Jan III Sobieski (1674), Augustus II (1696) and Augustus III (1745). To the latter, local residents complained about the Jews, saying that they had taken all trade into their hands and were ruining the city walls with their buildings. These complaints from local residents were an epilog to a process of many years' standing, which had arisen against the background of a blood libel against the local Jewish community. About 1698, the Sandomir Jews were accused of killing several Christian children. A son of the apothecary disappeared; a Christian woman abandoned the corpse of an illegitimate child in the courtyard of Aleksandr Berek, the head of the community. On August 18, 1710, young Georgi Krasnovsky disappeared. In the matter of the child of the Christian woman there began a notorious case, described by one of its prime instigators, the priest Stefan Zuchowsky, in the book "Oglos procesow kriminalnych na Żydow o rozne excessy, takze morderstwo dzieci osobliwie, w Sandomierze r. 1698 poswiadczone" [Notice of criminal trials of Jews accused of various excesses, including murder of children, attested to in Sandomierz in 1698]. According to Zuchowsky's tale, the original examination of the child's corpse indicated that he had died a natural death, which was confirmed under oath by the child's mother at the inquest. But here the clergy interfered. The case was referred for review. The mother was brought, through torture, to the realization that she had sold the child to the Jew Berek for it to be killed, and said that her initial statement was the result of sorcery. The case was referred to the tribunal in Lublin. At the instigation of the canon of Sandomir, the local clergy sent two envoys to the tribunal with a request to have revenge on the Jews for the murder of the child. There was no consensus among the judges on the question of guilt of the Jews. Then the clergy began to spread rumors that the Jews had bribed the judges. Aaron Berek was subjected to torture, but he remained firm and denied his guilt. Zuchowsky states that the Jews had obtained a royal order on suspension of the death penalty for Berek prior to the examination of the case. But the tribunal sent a delegation to the king that had to explain to him that this case was out of his jurisdiction; simultaneously, the tribunal ordered the death sentence to be carried out. Due to agitation by the clergy, unusual excitement ruled in the city. Several Jews were killed during the pogrom, and the Jewish street was looted. Further, local residents pleaded for the expulsion of the Jews from Sandomir. King August II, in a decree dated 28 April 1712, recognized the guilt of the Jews in the murder of children and ordered their expulsion, and ordered that the synagogue be converted into a clock tower. Zuchowsky himself took part in these orders. Nevertheless, Jews managed to stay in Sandomir. The militant church decided to immortalize the "ritual murders": a large painting (from the hand of the Italian Carlo de Prevo) that showed the scene of the mother selling her child to the Jews and its murder by them. To this day, the painting is in the cathedral church and elicits in the masses feelings of intolerance and racial antagonism. Under the painting is the following inscription: "Filius apothekarii ab infidelibus Judaeis Sand. occisus. A.D. 1698, 18 martii Margarita infans, et anno 1710, die 18 augusti Georgius Krasnowsky per Judaeos Sand. crudelissime jugulati" [The son of the apothecary was murdered by the infidel Jews of Sandomir, A.D. 1698, 18 March, child of Margarita; and in the year 1710, 18 August, Jerzy Krasnowski had his throat cut most crudely by the Jews of Sandomir]. [Ed.: See photo, in Kielce-Radom SIG Journal, VI:1 (Winter 2002), page 22]

In 1764, there were 880 Jews in Sandomir. Ten years later an order was issued according to which they would be allowed to have only 16 houses near the synagogue, they were forbidden to live outside the city walls or near the homes of the clergy or nobility. In each house there could live only one family with servants. Jewish houses had to be a certain distance from the city walls. Non-resident Jews could not stay in Sandomir more than three days. The king formed a commission to determine the number of existing Jewish houses and for the confiscation of houses above the allowed number (16). In 1778, the "Commission for Good Order" stated that 46 houses were in the hands of Jews, and restricted the future number of houses to this figure. The same commission forbade Jews to trade in wine and small amounts of salt, they could sell meat only to other Jews; the kahal had to present annualy to the city magistrate a list of all the Jews in the city. When Sandomir passed into Austrian hands in 1795, the rules of Joseph II were put into effect. Jews were given the right freely to carry on artisan professions, a German-Jewish school was opened, a kahal with three "Regierer" was introduced. In 1809, Sandomir was included in the Duchy of Warsaw, and in 1815 became part of the Kingdom of Poland. The synagogue situated at the end of the Jewish street, near the Opatów gates to which many years before it had been connected by a wall that surrounded the city, is, according to legend, one of three built by Ester, wife of Kazimierz the Great (the other two are in Opatów and Szydłowiec). During the reconstruction of the synagogue forty years ago, an inscription was found on the entrance in which the year 5015 (1215) could be deciphered. Most likely, the synagogue was built much later, in the 16th or early 17th century. The synagogue was restored again in 1911. The architecture of the synagogue is not particularly interesting. Only the valuable ancient curtains and utensils with curious ornamentation, and the old illustrated parchment siddur are of interest. One of the handles of the Torah scroll is marked 5303 (1543). In the old cemetery, all the stones are broken.

Today, Sandomir is the center of an uezd [district] in Radom Gubernia. In 1856, there were 2,230 Christians and 905 Jews in Sandomir. Restrictions on the population of Sandomir that existed during the transfer of the territory to Russia were in force until 1862. In the 1897 census, the population of the uezd was 100,000, of which 16,737 were Jews. Of these numbers, Sandomir itself had 6,556 residents including 2,163 Jews. In towns or villages in the uezd with more than 500 residents, those having the highest percentage of Jewish population were: Bogoria, 575 of 1,185; Zawichost, 1,680 of 2,545; Klimontów, 2,443 of 3,407; Koprzywnica, 836 of 2,152; Osiek, 590 of 1,431; Połaniec, 1,221 of 2,595; and Staszów, 4,903 of 8,724.

Extract Data in this Issue

Włoszczowa	Marriages	1858-1884	Dolores Ring
Opoczno	Marriages, Deaths	1848-1851	Debra J. Kay

The vital record extracts for this issue are the 1858-1884 Włoszczowa marriages, prepared by Dolores Ring; and the 1848-1851 Opoczno marriages and deaths, by Debra J. Kay. This data has been extracted from the civil registration books in possession of the Polish State Archives, and microfilmed by the Church of Jesus Christ Latter-day Saints (LDS). These extractions include information derived directly from the original registrations on the following LDS microfilms:

#0,716,149 Włoszczowa 1858-1865
#1,192,432 Włoszczowa 1866-1875
#1,192,433 Włoszczowa 1876
#1,809,028 Włoszczowa 1878-1884
#0,719,135 Opoczno 1848-1851

There are additional microfilmed records available for both towns.

Włoszczowa

Włoszczowa ("Vlotshev") was the district town (the county seat) of Włoszczowa powiat, in northwestern Kielce gubernia. The town of Włoszczowa's Jewish population in 1897 was 2,530 (68% of the entire town), and in 1931 it was 2,910.

Here we present extracts of the marriages recorded in the Jewish civil registers of Włoszczowa for 1858-1884, extracted from the Polish and Russian by Dolores Ring. Włoszczowa is a "new" town for us, for which we have not previously published any extracts. We will publish other historical material about Włoszczowa later this year.

The Włoszczowa marriages include marriage partners from other towns and villages in the region, such as Końskie, Kurzelów, Przedbórz, Secemin, Szczekociny, and some towns in neighboring Piotrków gubernia, such as Koniecpol and Przyrów.

Opoczno

Opoczno ("Opotshna") was the district town (the county seat) of Opoczno powiat, in northwestern Radom gubernia. The town of Opoczno's Jewish population in 1897 was 2,425, and in 1931 it was 3,376.

Here we present extracts of the marriages and deaths recorded in the Jewish civil registers of Opoczno for 1848-1851, extracted from the Polish by Debra J. Kay. We previously published extracts of the births for this period in V:4 (Autumn 2001), pages 62-69.

The Opoczno Jewish record books of this period also encompass the nearby towns of Drzewica, Gielniów, and Odrzywół, as well as many surrounding villages.

Note that seven of the microfilms of Jewish records for Opoczno are mis-catalogued in the LDS' Family History Library Catalog as "Church Records". These are the records of 1826-1860, on microfilms #719,131 to #719,137. See II:4 (Autumn 1998), pp. 16-17.

Microfilm #0,719,135 contains 13 separate registers for the town of Opoczno: For each year – 1848, 1849, 1850 and 1851 – there is a separate book containing births, marriages and deaths for that year. In each case, the book is labeled "Duplikat" on the cover. In addition, there are separate books for each category (birth, marriage, death): for 1848/49 (combined in one book) and 1850 and 1851. Although this would seem to indicate that the second set of books represented an "original" ("Unikat") of a record, Debra has noticed some discrepancies – there is information contained in some "Duplikat" records which is not contained in the "original", and visa versa, and the pattern of the writing may indicate "copying" in the "Unikat" book. The actual record-keeping methodology is unknown at this time.

Caution

These extracts are intended to assist the researcher in selecting records that may be of use for further study. There may be errors in interpretation in these extracts, due to the uneven quality of legibility of the handwriting, the microfilming, and the condition of the microfilm itself, in addition to errors in the original record books. As always, it is prudent for the researcher, when using secondary source data such as these extracts, to examine the primary source data for final verification. It is always best for the genealogist to view the actual records pertaining to his/her family to verify the interpretation, and glean additional facts.
