... but first a word from our editor

The table of contents on the cover of this issue may look a bit sparse, compared to previous issues – this issue contains several longer pieces instead of a larger number of smaller ones.

The subject of several pieces in this issue is the town of Pilica (“Piltz”, in Yiddish). We begin with a translation of the Pilica article from volume VII of Yad Vashem’s Hebrew-language Pinkas HaKehillot Polen, the “Encyclopaedia of Jewish Communities” of Poland. We again thank Yad Vashem for granting permission to translate and publish these excerpts. We also have the story of “A Visit to Piltz” by Sonia Pressman Fuentes.

Pilica is also included in the extracts of Jewish vital records from LDS microfilms in this issue. Pilica is a “new” town for us, for which we have not previously published extracts. We present the Jewish birth, marriage and death records of 1808-1825, as extracted from the Roman Catholic civil register by Robert Heyman. The other large set of extracts in this issue is a continuation of our series on Chęciny: the birth and marriage records of 1826-1833, extracted by Lauren B. Eisenberg Davis and Dolores Lee Ring.

The other pieces in the issue are a transcript of the over 1,300 Jewish professional and businesses listed in the 1932 business directory for the city of Radom, transcribed by Lena Fizman; and Howard Zakai writes a review of Sara’s Children: The Destruction of Chmielnik.

And finally... A new SIG “coordinator” is needed for next year.

Mark Froimowitz, who will have been the coordinator for three years at the end of 2002, will be stepping down from that position for health reasons and will need to be replaced. The title of coordinator is a misnomer since he does no coordinating. However, he has been responsible for keeping track of subscribers, answering queries, depositing funds, paying bills, dealing with the printers, and mailing out issues of the Journal. If necessary, this position could be broken into two parts. We need one or two volunteers to perform these vital functions in order to continue to put out our journal. If you are able to volunteer for this, please contact me at the address at the left.

Pilica is first mentioned in documents from the 12th century. In that century, Aton, the father-in-law of King Wladislaw Jaglo, built a church and a castle there. The nobles who owned the place enlarged the castle from time to time. (At the end of the 19th century, this castle passed into the hands of Jakob Epszajn, a well-known Jewish banker from Warsaw).

In the 16th century, Pilica was a medium-sized town. It had two flour mills at the time and about 20 craftsmen (including three bakers, three weavers, two tailors, two blacksmiths, two butchers and a locksmith) and six specialists and apprentices.

It is assumed that Pilica was granted the status of a city in the middle of the 16th century, but we have no records to document the event. In the 17th century, it was an ecclesiastical center and the seat of the bishop. In 1632, a Christian hospital was established in Pilica. In the middle of the 17th century, the Swedish invaders, who destroyed and ruined the city, captured Pilica, and even after their retreat, the city did not recover for a long time. Only the nobles of the house of Wassal, who acquired Pilica in 1791, invested great efforts in rehabilitation and development, and within a few years, they turned the town into a regional center of commerce and handicraft. From approximately the same period, Pilica was allowed to hold an annual fair and two weekly market days. With the partition of Poland at the end of the 18th century, Pilica was annexed to Austria; during the years 1807-1813 it was part of the "Duchy of Warsaw" founded by Napoleon; and in 1815 it was included in the [Russian] Congress Kingdom of Poland.

The Jews up to the end of the First World War

In the beginning of the 17th century, there was a small Jewish settlement in Pilica, apparently from the period in which it was granted the status of a city. In 1662, Christians took over the synagogue and turned it into a house of worship of their own. In 1781, the Jews of Pilica were granted a privilege which entitled them to, among other things, free trade. A Polish document of that time states that Jews settled in Pilica in their masses, that they controlled local commerce which took place mainly in the town square and that they owned many houses near the square. The nobles of the house of Wassal, who owned the city, contracted tax collection out to the Jews. However, most of the Jews of Pilica earned a living from various types of trade and handicraft. Among them were successful grain traders who had reputations in the entire region. A local Jew, Joachim (Chaim) Salmonowicz, leased the local pub and the manufacture of brandy and its marketing (the "Propinacia"), and his brother, Hersz Salmonowicz, leased a paper factory, a wax candle factory as well as the monopoly on producing and selling salt.

During the 19th century, the number of Jews in the town grew, and they had an important role in its development and industrialization. At the end of the 19th century, Pilica already had 4,000 inhabitants and several manufacturing plants – three regular flour mills and a fourth one which was powered by steam, a sawmill, a paper processing factory, a woolen mill, a yeast and starch factory, a brewery for beer and a malt drying plant. About 300 inhabitants of the town earned their livelihood from these plants, which were mainly owned by Jews. Jews also owned most of the pubs in the town. In this period, several 'Tsachim' and guilds of artisans according to their professions were founded in Pilica.

The owners of the city, the nobles of the house of Wassal, confirmed the appointment of Rabbi Elazar son of Rabbi Arje Lajb Rokach (1758 – 1833), the author of "Szemen Rokach" [Oil of Healing], as the rabbi of the community, in exchange for a large loan that he gave them (180 ducats), and promised him that he could hold the post until the loan was paid in full. In 1800, he left the place and moved to Moravia and later served in Santow, which is in Hungary. For many years after Rabbi Arje Lejb left, the community was left without a rabbi and made do with a rabbinical judge and instructor.

In the middle of the 18th century, Pilica already had a medium sized Jewish community, which was involved in the public affairs of the entire region and took part in the assemblies of the "Va'ad Medina" [National Committee] and the "Va'ad Arba Aratzot" [Committee of the Four Lands, the autonomous government of Polish Jews between 1580 and 1764]. Between 1760 – 1764, a short time before it was dismantled (in 1765), the "Va'ad" met in Pilica. Towards the end of that century, the community of Pilica numbered over one hundred families.

In the second half of the 19th century, a new synagogue was built in Pilica, instead of the old building from the 17th century that had been converted, in its time, into a Christian chapel. At the same time, a holy asset was also the cemetery. Apparently, the rabbinate returned to Pilica some time during this period. Of the rabbis of the town, we know the names of Rabbi Josef Najminc, author of "Ma'ase Choshev" (died in 1800); Rabbi Avraham Tzvi Hersh, author of "Brit Avraham" (died in 1818), who moved to Piotrków in 1812. Rabbi Avraham Tzvi Hersh was already a Chassid, and so were the rabbis who came after him. Rabbi Levi Itzak, a Kotsk Chassid, served there as rabbi until he moved to Zduńska-Wola. After him, Rabbi Jechiel Danciger was the rabbi of Pilica, later the founder of Alexander Chassidism [Aleksandrów Łódzki] (died in 1894); Rabbi Pinchas Elijah Rotenberg, the nephew of Rabbi Icak Mejer of Gur [Gora Kalwaria] (died in 1903); and his cousin, Rabbi Pinchas Menachem Justman, author of "Siftei Tzadik", who became an Admo"r [Chassidic Rabbi] in 1905 (died in 1920 while serving in Częstochowa, cf.). Rabbi Jakob (the baker of Piltz) also had a reputation in Chassidism, and the "Seer of Lublin" held him in high esteem.

The leaders of the community at the end of the 18th century, Jakob Marz and Benjamin Bejusz Josefowicz, were part of the group of leaders advocating the Jewish cause at the "Four Year Sejm" [1788-1792]. One of them was also the Jewish representative on the city council.

In 1894, the first Zionist group organized in Pilica, and in 1897, a branch of "Chovevei Tzion" was founded. Several years later, branches of "HaMizrachi" and "Poalei Tzion" were also founded.

At the beginning of the twentieth century, anti-Semitic attitudes became more prevalent in Pilica. The Polish tradesmen and artisans organized their own cooperative association with which they hoped to gain a competitive edge in business and to exclude the Jews. In 1911, farmers from the surrounding villages stormed Jewish homes, breaking windows and looting their possessions.

With the outbreak of World War I, many of the Jews of Pilica fled. Those who remained in the town suffered from the heavy hand of the Cossacks of the Russian occupying force in Pilica. At that time, two big fires broke out in the town and many of the Jewish homes burned to the ground, and besides all that, there was an epidemic there.

The Jews between the Two World Wars

Many of the Jews who fled the city during the war years did not return to Pilica, and both the Jewish and general population shrank. In this period, Jews continued to pursue their traditional professions, commerce and handicraft, including light industry. Several were members of the free professions, particularly lawyers and doctors. The economic crisis that affected all of Poland at this time affected the Jews first and foremost. Business permits – to sell monopoly goods (tobacco and liquor), for running pubs, etc. – were denied them on one excuse or another, and the Polish shops and cooperatives, which were growing in number, overtook the Jews in economic competition. In 1930, there were 8 Polish shops in the town and 68 Jewish ones; Five years later, the number of non-Jewish shops had reached 18 and their turnover had also grown.

The community mobilized to aid the needy and founded several new credit institutions with the help of the Joint. In 1922, the old "Kupat Gmilit Chasadin" [Charity and Social Welfare Association] renewed its activity. The Jewish merchants and artisans founded their own association "Yad Charutzim", and opened charities for their members. In 1926, a cooperative Jewish bank was founded. In the thirties, the economic straits of the Jews of Pilica worsened. In 1936, about 300 families requested aid for the Passover holiday from the "Kimcha dePascha" [Flour for Passover] organization, and a year later, the number of families who needed this aid had risen to 470.

In 1924, the Admo"r Baruch Kalonymus son of Rabbi Eliezer HaLevi Horowicz-Szternfeld (1885-1942) settled in Pilica from Chęciny (cf.), and he also functioned as the community's rabbi.

The Zionists, who had been active in Pilica since the beginning of the century, became a major factor in community life at the end of World War I. In 1923, a local branch of the "Hit'achdut" party was founded, whose members merged with "Po'alei Tzion" in the early thirties. In 1934, the merged party numbered 180 members. The "General Zionists" had at the same time about 150 members. "HaMizrachi" was very limited in scope during the twenties, but grew stronger in the thirties. The town also had a branch of the Revisionists. Alongside the Zionist parties, there were several youth groups in Pilica as well. "HaShomer HaTza'ir" [The Young Guard] founded a cell in Pilica in the early twenties; in 1930, a cell of "HaNo'ar HaTzioni" [Zionist Youth]; and aside from these, Pilica also had "Akiva", "Beitar", "Gordonia" and "HeChalutz". The community's women were active in the WIZO branch, which focused mainly on matters of education and welfare.

One can learn something of the distribution of power in the Zionist camp in Pilica from the results of the elections to the Zionist Congresses. In the 1927 elections, the "Hitachdut" party won the majority, 104 votes, The "General Zionists" got 33 votes and "HaMizrachi" got one vote. In 1931, "Hitachdut" got 238 votes, the Revisionists got 116 votes, The "General Zionists" 63 and "HaMizrachi" 3. In the 1933 elections, the "League of Working Eretz Israel" got 154 votes, the Revisionists received 125 votes, the "General Zionists" 105 and "HaMizrachi" 14.

The Zionists also developed lively activity in the areas of education, culture and sport. Most of the children in the community studied in the public elementary school at the time. The Zionists founded a high school from the "Tarbut" chain in the town, but it was continually opening and closing. Next to the branch of the "General Zionists" there was a library. The city also had a "Makabi" sports club. In the early thirties, the Zionists meant to set up a "Peoples' Hall", and had already acquired a lot with funds raised by Pilica natives in the United States, but nothing is known to us regarding the completion of the project.

In 1922, a branch of "Agudas Israel" was founded in Pilica. In 1926, the members of the "Aguda" founded a girls' school from the "Beis Jakob" chain, which 120 students attended at its opening.

The town also had a small branch of the "Bund", and several of the Jews were active in the illegal Communist party.

The results of the elections to the community council can testify to the power distribution between the various parties and currents of opinion in the community. In 1931, the "General Zionists" and "HaMizrachi" each won two representatives on the council (half of the members of the council), "Agudas Israel" received two places and a non-party list that was affiliated with the Zionists also received two representatives. The Zionists, together with the non-party list that supported them, therefore won 6 out of the total 8 places on the council.

In the 1927 elections to the city council, the Jews received 8 of the total 18 mandates, but in 1933 their strength had shrunk by half (the Zionists received two mandates and the orthodox also two).

Violent attacks against the Jews of the surrounding villages became much more numerous in 1936 as well as against the Jewish peddlers from Pilica who went around the villages with their wares. In Pilica itself, violent anti-Semitism was on the rise, the economic boycott against Jewish business became tighter and incidents of thugs attacking and injuring Jews became more common.

During World War II

The Germans conquered Pilica on September 5, 1939. When they entered the city, there were 1,500 Jews left there; several hundred Jews, mainly younger ones, had succeeded in escaping a short time before that, to the east to areas that were under Soviet control. However, as time passed, some of them returned to Pilica, and besides them, Jewish refugees from the area and from other places in Poland also arrived. Within two years, the number of Jews had grown to about 2,000. In October 1939, Pilica was attached to the General-Government, and in December of the same year it, was included in the Miechów district and ordered to report to the local government unit in Wolbrom (cf.) nearby. The representatives of the German government were not stationed there (with the exception of one gendarme) and left the administration of the affairs of the town in the hands of the Polish mayor.

The restrictions imposed on all of the Jews in the General-Government applied, in the nature of things, to the Jews of Pilica as well. Thus, for example, at the end of 1939, they were forced to wear a white arm ribbon with a blue Star of David. However, since the Germans were not interfering in what was going on in the town, the Jews could continue to conduct an almost normal way of life, until the fall of 1941. There was no ghetto in Pilica and most of the Jews continued to live in their apartments. A few of the Jews continued to earn their livelihood as they had earlier, from commerce and crafts but many were left without sources of income and had to sell their possessions to the Poles in order to buy food. From time to time, on market days, the German gendarmes from Wolbrom came to Pilica and on these occasions they looted the Jewish market stands, and at times, also their dwellings.

At the end of 1939, apparently a Judenrat was founded in Pilica headed by Fogel, and alongside it, a Jewish police force was established. From time to time, the Judenrat received food rations to distribute among the Jews. The Judenrat and local representatives of the "JSS" (Jewish Self-Help) organization from Kraków helped the poor and the ill, opened a soup kitchen for the needy and for the children and even opened a hospital and clinic. At the beginning of 1941, representatives of the health organization TAZ were also in Pilica and the children of the poor were under the care of the community physician. In September 1941, the Judenrat meant to open an elementary school for 150 children aged 7-14, but it is not known if this came to fruition.

In 1941, the municipality of Pilica employed 75 Jews who were "eligible for work" in clearing snow and other seasonal work. In return, they received a miniscule salary and an additional stipend of 5 zloty per day from the Judenrat. The workers also had meals from the soup kitchen and received half a kilogram of bread twice a week gratis.

At the end of 1941, the laws against the Jews in the General-Government worsened. For every transgression, great and small, the punishment was the same – death. The new chief of police and security in Wolbrom, named Baumgarten, visited Pilica often and his visits frequently ended with the murder of Jews. In December 1941, on a Saturday, gendarmes entered Pilica and took six hostages, among them Rabbi Szternfeld. The Jews were commanded to collect and to turn over to the Germans all of the furs in their possession within three hours. In spite of the fact that the furs were handed in on time, the hostages were only released the following day towards evening.

In the spring of 1942, a large group of healthy and strong Jewish youths were sent from Pilica to labor camps in Plaszów and in Bochnia. In the summer of 1942, when the Germans had already begun deporting Jews from the area to extermination camps, a sewing shop was opened in the synagogue building where uniforms were sewn for the German army. A few weeks before the deportation from Pilica, many Jews gathered in the office of the chairman of the Judenrat in order to get work permits, hoping in this way to be saved. On June 5, 1942, the Jews of Pilica received word of the "Aktion" of the deportation of the Jews of nearby Słomniki (cf.). Rabbi Szternfeld declared a large-scale operation of charity for the poor of the community and a special prayer in the synagogue. On June 8th, a public fast was declared. In the charity operation 40,000 zloty were collected. Towards the end of 1942, news of deportations was becoming more frequent, and the Jews searched feverishly for hiding places with Poles in the city or the countryside.

The Jews heard in advance regarding their deportation from Pilica, which was set for September 5th, 1942. Many were able to flee the city and during the days and weeks, they hid in the fields and the forests. Several found shelter in the villages. A group of Jews fled to Żarki (cf.) where the first "Aktion" was held at the beginning of October 1942. Some say that approximately half of the community members were able to avoid the first deportation to the extermination camps.

On the morning of September 5th, 1942, it was a Saturday, the Germans ordered the Jews of Pilica to report with their possessions to the market square. Those among them who were confined to their beds or who violated the order for some other reason were shot in the houses. From those gathered in the square, the Germans separated the disabled, the elderly and the children, led them to the Jewish cemetery and murdered them all by gunshot. The others were taken by boxcars to Wolbrom where they waited, together with the Jews of Wolbrom, Zarnowiec (cf.) and several nearby towns at the lot next to the train station. The next day, September 6th, 1942, the Germans made a selection. Most of the younger men were separated and scattered among various labor camps, while the others were sent by train to the Belzec extermination camp. Of approximately 3,000 Jews who lived in Pilica at the time, 1,060 were on this transport. The rest fled and hid. Seven Jews from Pilica and Wolbrom who fled during this "Aktion" were caught at Żarki and were executed there.

A group of Jews from Pilica, mainly members of the Judenrat and the Jewish policemen with their families (according to testimony, about 60 families, and according to another version, 44 people) were not included in this deportation and remained in Pilica. After the first deportation, Jews from other towns in the area were brought to Pilica and one can assume, therefore, that the number of Jews there reached several hundred. All of them were concentrated together in several neighboring houses next to the synagogue, in terribly crowded conditions and with barely any furniture or housewares, since after the first deportation, the abandoned houses of the Jews were broken into by Germans and Poles and emptied of their contents. The Jews who were left in Pilica were kept busy collecting, cleaning and organizing the abandoned possessions of the deportees.

In the beginning of November [1942], apparently, the Germans brought the last of the Jews in Pilica to a central point and murdered them. This time as well, there were those who succeeded in fleeing or hiding, and some of them crept into ghettos in Będzin and Sosnowiec (cf.), in the area that had been annexed to the Reich.

In the spring of 1942, an underground was organized by members of the youth movements from Pilica and Zarki, about 60 young men and women, who divided up into groups of five. The members of the underground requested the help of the chairman of the Judenrat. Fogel told them about a hiding place where three pistols had been hidden, and gave them money to purchase more arms and allowed them to use the Judenrat typewriter. The young people were able to contact a unit of Polish partisans of the Military Socialistic Organization (SOB) which was operating in the surrounding villages, and their commander, a man by the name of Rudolf, agreed for them to fight as a separate group under the auspices of his unit. In the summer of 1942, the Jewish fighters raised money from the inhabitants of the area and bought 8 rifles. They kept in touch with the Jewish and Polish underground movements in Będzin, in Opoczno and in Jędrzejów (cf.). One of the Jewish activists was caught by the Gestapo and executed.

When the members of the underground found out about the deportation planned for September 5-6th, they developed a plan of action: with the beginning of the "Aktion", they would set fire to the Jewish houses and defend themselves with arms. However, the Germans acted before them and the deportation was over before the fighters could organize a defense. The members of the underground lost contact with each other. Those who escaped the deportation hid with Poles, first in Pilica, and later in the three bunkers they had built for themselves with Polish farmers – the Rogorzinski family and Sandra and Bronislaw Janus. In January 1943 the Germans found out about the bunkers. They raided them and killed three Jewish fighting women and Mrs. Rogorzinski. As the raid went on, most of the fighters who were hiding in the two other bunkers were killed. Ester Ruszinek, who was hiding in the bunker at the Janus family, said that the battle went on for three hours, and that of the twelve fighters, two others aside from her survived – her cousin Berek Ruszinek and Szmuel Poliwoda.

A Polish family from the town of Karczowiec in the Miechów district, Mariana Kisziel and her husband, sheltered 11 Jews from Pilica, Wodzisław and Sosnowiec for over two years. Another Pole, whose name is not known to us, hid Bela Paris's sister (Poliwoda) with her family, but was caught and the Germans executed him together with his 8 children and the four Jews he was trying to save.

After the war, not a single Jew was left in Pilica. The old Jewish cemetery was destroyed and houses were built on the lot. In the new cemetery on Adam Mickiewicz Street, 200 complete tombstones and the fence remained intact.

A Visit to Piltz

by Sonia Pressman Fuentes

In the 1970s, when I told my mother that I planned to go to Poland someday, she said, "What for?". She had been born in Poland in a shtetl called Piltz, but, after her mother died when my mother was ten years old, she lived with her uncle in Warsaw until her marriage at the age of 22 in 1914 to my father, followed by their immediate departure for Germany. (My father, who was 20 at the time of their marriage, had also been born in Piltz, but he had left at the age of 14 to seek his fortune in Germany.) Poland to my mother meant poverty and anti-Semitism.

My father died in 1968 and my mother died in 1975, but the urge to visit Poland stayed with me. This pull to return to my roots was, of course, not unique to me. Many, if not most, people share it. Frank Viviano, the author of Blood Washes Blood, A True Story of Love, Murder, and Redemption Under the Sicilian Sun, wrote about his trip to the Sicilian town of Terrasini, where his family had lived for generations: "I can't really explain why I've come here, to a village where I know no one and have no past of my own."

Initially, I had planned to go in 1998 but had to cancel, because my involvement in writing my memoirs didn't leave time for the trip. After the book was published at the end of 1999, the idea of visiting Poland returned. It was a drive to complete my life – to go back to where it all began – for my parents and therefore also for me.

Nonetheless, I was torn by the decision. I knew of Poland's anti-Semitism, in the past and today. I had just read of the murder of the 1,600 Jews of Jedwabne (pronounced Yed-VAB-neh) who were brought to the town square on July 10, 1941, beaten with clubs and stones, then locked in a peasant's barn and burned to death, not by Nazis, but by their neighbors – fellow Poles. This was revealed in the book Neighbors, published in March 2001 by Polish emigre Jan Tomasz Gross.

I'd also read an article called "Warsaw Diary: Democracy in the Balance" by Shana Penn in the Dec. 2000/Jan. 2001 issue of Lilith, the Jewish feminist magazine. The author wrote that a "backlash against feminism has gained momentum here in recent months, largely because feminist ideas are circulating in the mainstream media." She said that the women's movement was under attack from the pulpit, in the press and even in parliament. She quoted Cardinal Jozef Glemp, head of the powerful Polish Catholic Church, who warned the nation during an official Corpus Christi commemoration on June 22, 2000, about the world's evils, especially feminists, "propagators of a new social disorder, [who seek] to kill the unborn . . . promote sexual promiscuity and the elimination of marriage." She quoted a member of parliament who said: "The state ought to organize social life so as to minimize the damage done to the family by the fact that women work." Since I was one of the founders of the National Organization for Women (NOW) and the first woman attorney in the Office of the General Counsel at the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission (EEOC), this troubled me greatly. Why should I, a Jew and a feminist, go to a country with a long history of anti-Semitism and a current backlash against women's rights?

On the other hand, I read a most positive article in the April 11, 2001, issue of the Forward about Ellen Friedland and her husband, Curt Fissel. Ellen, who is Jewish, and Curt, who discovered his Jewish roots in Poland and subsequently converted to Judaism, were documentary filmmakers. The April article was about their documentary, From Kristallnacht to Crystal Day: A Synagogue in Wroclaw Glows Again, shown on PBS nationwide in April 2001. I e-mailed Ellen about my misgivings about a trip to Poland. She called Poland "magical" and encouraged me to go.

Conflicted as I was, I made plans to go to Poland on August 11, 2001, on a two-week Jewish Heritage trip run by Elderhostel, in Boston, Massachusetts, in cooperation with Scandanavian Seminar in Amherst, Massachusetts, and Mazurkas Travel in Warsaw, Poland. I asked Scandanavian Seminar to arrange a side trip for me to Piltz. I wanted to see and step foot in the shtetl where both my parents had been born and married and where my grandparents had lived. Furthermore, the first chapter of my memoirs, Eat First—You Don't Know What They'll Give You, The Adventures of an Immigrant Family and Their Feminist Daughter, takes place in Piltz. I based it on what I remembered of my parents' stories but I wanted to see how close my recollection was to the truth.

My parents had told me that I'd been to Poland with them in 1931, when I was three years old, to visit my paternal grandmother, Udel Olmer, but I, of course, had no recollection of this trip. They also told me that after my father became a well-to-do businessman in Germany, they would return to Piltz and provide monies for the dowry and weddings of impoverished young Jewish women who might not otherwise have been able to marry.

Before writing the first chapter of my book in 1994, I began my efforts to locate Piltz. I wracked my memory, and sent letters and e-mails to YIVO (the Institute for Jewish Research) in New York City; the National Yiddish Book Center in South Hadley, Massachusetts; Miriam Weiner of Secaucus, New Jersey (she runs "Routes to Roots" tours for those interested in visiting Jewish ancestral towns in Europe); the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints (Mormon Church) and the Genealogical Society of Utah in Salt Lake City, Utah; the Museum of the Jewish Diaspora in Tel Aviv; Yad Vashem, the Holocaust Martyrs' and Heroes' Remembrance Authority in Jerusalem; the Embassy of Poland in Washington, D.C.; the State Archives and other offices in Katowice, Poland; and the Library of Congress. Not every organization responded and those who did sent me conflicting information.

There appeared to be two towns named Piltz – one in Kielce province and the other in Katowice province. I could not tell from the information I received which Piltz was my parents' shtetl. If I had thought to ask my parents to locate Piltz for me when they were alive, they could, of course, have done it in minutes. Now I was spending years on it and I couldn't work it out.

My search was complicated by the fact that due to wars and partitions that divided the Polish kingdom among Russia, Austria, and Prussia, the map of Poland was constantly changing. Furthermore, while Piltz was the name my parents used, the Polish names were different. It was generally referred to as Pilica but was also called Pilitsa and Piltz. In addition, there was another town called Pilzno.

In the U. S. Holocaust Memorial Museum Library in Washington, D.C., I found a book, at the back of which there were the names and addresses of people who were interested in various shtetlakh. Several were listed for Piltz, one of whom was a Jacqueline Wasserstein. I wrote to her and she responded by sharing with me information she had, and she also suggested that I contact her husband's cousin, Michael Spitzberg, who had just visited Piltz. Michael told me that Piltz was northwest of Krakow on the Pilica River. He encouraged me to visit.

According to maps I had received, the Piltz that Michael had visited was also northwest of Wolbrom, northeast of Bedzin (Bendin in Yiddish), Katowice, and Sosnowiec, and southeast of Czestochowa. I had frequently heard my father mention Bendin, Katowitz and Sosnowitz and members of his family had lived in Bendin. I decided to visit this Piltz.

I learned a good bit about its history and the history of its Jews. The name of the settlement was already noted as Pilicium in the year 1228. There was a Jewish cemetery in Piltz founded in the 18th century, which was completely devastated, but another, founded in the 19th century on Mickiewiczza Street, is still there. From the website of the Kielce-Radom Special Interest Group (<http://www.jewishgen.org/krsig>) and Warren Blatt, I learned that in 1897, the population of Piltz was 3,950, about 68 percent of whom, 2,688 people, were Jewish. In 1931, its Jewish population was 1,877. Before the war in 1939, its Jewish population numbered about 2,500.

Information on the Jewish history of Piltz, especially life there between 1939 and 1942, is detailed in Kiddush Hashem: Jewish Religious and Cultural Life in Poland During the Holocaust, by Shimon Huberband, Jeffrey S. Gurock and Robert S. Hirt, published in 1987. This book is a translation from Yiddish of Holocaust archival materials collected and written by Huberband, a young Orthodox rabbi and historian, who was killed in Treblinka in 1942. In the section "On the Destruction of East European Jewry," on pages

325-330, the book states that Piltz was an “ancient Jewish community” with a Jewish cemetery dating back several hundred years and a very old and “exquisitely built” synagogue. It mentions the renowned talmudists who served as its rabbis. A note at the end of the piece states:

During the first expulsion [of Jews] of January 5, 1940, the Nazis killed, shot, confiscated Jewish possessions, etc. During the second half of 1942 the community was totally liquidated. The few remaining Jews were sent to the Maidanek deathcamp.

Originally, I had not planned to do any research while I was Piltz. I knew no one there and didn't imagine that there would be any records relating to my parents. However, Sabine, my contact at Scandanavian Seminar, wrote that Lilla, her contact at Mazurkas Travel, thought it was possible that there was a book available at the local church that might contain information on my family. Lilla offered to call the priest about this and to get back to me. Because of this, I decided to see if I could find any records of my parents.

I expected that my search would be fruitless. In 1978, when I had gone to Berlin, Germany, my birthplace, my brother, Hermann, who was fourteen years my senior, had given me addresses for the places where my family had lived when I was born and where my father's retail men's clothing business had been located. I found those locations with no trouble – and even went into the building where my family had lived when I was born. But now my brother was dead, and I had nothing to go on. I wasn't even sure the Piltz I was going to was in fact my parents' shtetl; I knew my mother's maiden name was Dombek (little oak) but I didn't know its Polish spelling and wasn't certain of the spelling of the first and maiden name of my maternal grandmother, the first name of my maternal grandfather, the first and maiden names of my paternal grandmother and the first name of my paternal grandfather. I had not a single address or personal contact.

On August 12, 2001, I arrived in Poland. There followed almost two weeks of memorable activities in Warsaw, Lodz, Lublin, Krakow, and other cities: lectures, films, concerts, visits to the Warsaw and Krakow ghettos, Mila 18 (where on May 8, 1943, as many as 120 Jewish Warsaw Ghetto resistance fighters may have lost their lives when the Nazis attacked their bunker), the Jewish Historical Museum, the Ronald S. Lauder Foundation (which for over a decade has been committed to rebuilding Jewish life in that part of Europe where the destruction of the Holocaust was followed by the oppression of Communist rule), the Nuzhik Synagogue in Warsaw, Kazimierz (pronounced Kaz'i mish), the formerly-Jewish neighborhood of Krakow, Oskar Schindler's factory in Krakow, and the death camps of Treblinka, Majdanek, and Plaszow.

On August 24, the group was going to Oswiecim to visit Auschwitz, but that was the day I had arranged for my trip to Piltz. As I bid “good-bye” to the members of the tour group that morning, they all said they were anxious to hear what I would find in Piltz. I nodded, certain that I would find nothing.

Krystyna, my 70ish Polish interpreter, who was employed part-time by Mazurkas Travel, picked me up at 9:00 a.m. that day in the lobby of the Hotel Cracovia where I was staying. We went outside and joined the driver, who also worked for Mazurkas. As we drove, I felt like a fool – going to a town which might or might not have been my parents' hometown, where I had no contacts and no addresses, and was not even certain of the spelling of the names of the people for whom I was looking or the dates of their births. Lilla had never gotten back to me about the priest in Piltz or arranged a meeting for me with him, so I did not even know whether I'd be able to see him. For those reasons, I had wanted to hire the car, driver, and interpreter for half a day but the only arrangement I could make was for a full day. I knew I would have nothing to do in Piltz that would require a day. I assumed we'd ride into the town – take a look around – and return to Krakow.

Krystyna and I chatted during the one-hour trip. She told me of the dislocations and hardships she and her family had endured, first under the Nazi occupation of Krakow, and then under Communist rule. Jews, of course, were not the only victims in Poland.

As we entered Piltz, we were struck by the loveliness of the town. We passed the Pilz River and drove around the charming market square. There was no hint of the atrocities to the Jews that had taken place in the town.

The only lead I had was the church, so we headed for that. We found it easily – it was just past the town square – but we had some difficulty finding the entrance. As we looked for it, I saw a sign in front of a nearby building that said “Biblioteka”. “Hey, there’s a library,” I said to Krystyna. “I’m a writer. Why don’t we go there?” The driver let us out and I began walking up the driveway to the library, followed by Krystyna. It was 10:15 a.m.

Immediately, Krystyna called to stop me. She pointed to another sign that listed the library’s hours, which indicated that on Fridays, which was the day we were there, the library didn’t open until 11:00 a.m. “I don’t care about that, Krystyna,” I said, and kept walking. Krystyna, not understanding my American can-do spirit, again spoke to me and pointed to the sign. “That’s not for me, Krystyna,” I said and kept walking. At that, a window on the second floor of the library opened and a dark-haired woman stuck her head out. I assumed she lived there, had been disturbed by the contretemps between Krystyna and me, and had opened the window to complain. Instead, she turned out to be the librarian, and she motioned for us to come in.

Her name was Anna and meeting her was one of those special moments life throws you every once in a while. Anna, a beautiful woman who appeared to be in her forties, welcomed us with warmth. I introduced myself and Krystyna and told her the reason for my visit. Anna described herself as a “local patriot” who was very devoted to Piltz. She told me it meant a great deal to her that I thought about Piltz, remembered it, wrote about it in my memoirs and had come to visit. In answer to my questions about the overall population of Piltz and its Jewish populations, if any, she said she was a statistician, that Piltz’s current population was 2014, and that there were no Jews in the town. It was terribly sad for me to realize that this shtetl, once the site of a vital Jewish community, now had not a single Jew.

Anna began looking up my family’s names in various books and, as she did, we chatted about the facts that we both had daughters, were both wearing purple outfits, and both cared about Piltz. I told her of my mother’s reminiscences about the town, and she confirmed them. During much of the conversation, Anna had tears in her eyes. She asked me if I could send her a copy of my memoirs with my autograph and a picture for the library. She said her daughter, who knew English, would read the book to her. I said I’d be happy to send her my picture and would ask my British publisher, Planetree Publishing, Ltd., to send her a copy of the book, but I wouldn’t be able to autograph it because it would be mailed from the U.K. Then she asked if I could sign my autograph on a sheet of paper, which she would insert into the book. When I agreed, she brought a sheet of paper, on which I signed my name and added an expression of my feelings. Anna immediately asked Krystyna to write the Polish translation of my comments on that sheet. Then she ran for a plastic cover, in which she encased my autograph and comments to protect them.

When Anna was unable to find any record of my family, I remembered a telephone conversation with Joachim Russek, the non-Jewish head of the Center for Jewish Culture in Kazimierz, several days earlier. I’d been in touch with Joachim via e-mail since 1998, when I’d first planned to go to Poland. Now, I told him of my interest in looking for family records and my plan to visit the church. “Why don’t you go see the mayor” he suggested.

“The mayor?” I said, incredulous. It hadn’t occurred to me to ask the top officer of the city about my family records. “Why not?” continued Joachim. “It’s a small town.” “All right,” I said. What did I have to lose?

Now I mentioned this to Anna. She immediately called the mayor’s office and arranged for me to see the woman in charge of the Office of Births, Marriages and Deaths. Anna and I took some pictures together, and she walked Krystyna and me outside. There, she pointed to the nearby church with the priest sitting on a bench in front. We hugged good-bye – this time we both had tears in our eyes – and Krystyna and I walked over to the priest.

I told the priest that I was Jewish and was looking for records of my family who had lived in Piltz. Without rising from his bench, he said he had records on everyone who had been baptized. We got into the car and drove to the mayor’s office.

A large, expressionless woman was sitting behind a desk in the Office of Births, Marriages and Deaths. Krystyna and I seated ourselves, and I told the woman what I was there to find. I wrote down the names of my family members and the approximate birth dates of my parents. The woman brought six huge books down from a nearby shelf to her desk and arranged them by year, starting with 1891. She found nothing in the first two books, as I expected, and then, while she was reviewing the 1893 book, she said, "Here it is." Quickly, I arose and came to stand beside her so I could look over her shoulder as she began to read from that book. The writing was incomprehensible to me because it was in Russian, since Piltz was under Russian control at the time. She read that in 1893 my maternal grandfather, Itzhak-Moshe Dombek, had registered the birth of my mother, Hinda Leah Dombek, as of March 15, 1892; that he and her mother were both forty years old at the time and that her mother's name was Szandla Czeschkowska. As if of their own accord, my hands flew up to my cheeks. I was, after all, in the right shtetl; my mother had actually been born there and I was there to see it! I stood there, unable to say a word.

The fact that the registration was in the 1893 book jibed with what my mother had always told me, namely, that my maternal grandfather did not bother to go to the registry office when he had only one child to register but waited until he had more than one. The registry, however, contained only my mother's name; perhaps my grandfather went to the registry office only when he had more than one thing to do in the building.

Krystyna, who shared my excitement, was surprised about my maternal grandmother's maiden name, which she said was a Polish name, but not a Jewish name. My grandmother was, of course, Jewish, but I had no explanation for this. [Editor's note: Many Polish surnames were borne by both Polish Christians and Jews, most notably toponymic names ending with "ski".]

Shortly after the woman at the desk found this record, Anna walked in, wanting to see how I was doing. I had planned to call and tell her what happened, but now I didn't have to. She shared my delight in my find.

The woman at the desk gave me a xeroxed copy of the page in question and typed up my mother's birth certificate for me for twenty zlotys (about $5).

There was, however, no record of my father's family. Since I remembered my father's frequently referring to Bendin, I asked the woman if she could phone her counterpart in Bendin for information there. She did so; there was no record of my father, but there was a record of his late brother, Iser, who had come to the States many years ago, and whom I had met. Yale Reisner, Director of Research and Archives for the Jewish Historical Society in Warsaw, part of the Ronald S. Lauder Foundation, had also found a record of Iser, who had registered as a survivor after the Holocaust. Joachim Russek later told me that there may be records of my father's family at the Polish State Archives branch in Katowice.

Krystyna and I then went upstairs to the office of Mayor Michal Otrebski. He was out but we chatted with his secretary, who was most gracious. She gave both Krystyna and me a beautiful glossy booklet about Piltz.

As we left the building, I saw two men entering it and recognized one of them as Mayor Otrebski from his picture in the brochure. I stopped him, introduced myself, and chatted with him about Anna's graciousness and the thrill of finding the record of my mother's birth.

After Krystyna, the driver, and I had lunch at a café on the market square, we drove to the Jewish cemetery. The driver took us to a street, stopped the car and motioned for me to enter the adjacent grounds. There was a white fence around the area, broken at the point the driver asked me to enter. I refused to do so. I did not believe this land overgrown with grass and underbrush could be the entrance to a cemetery and was fearful of entering. But the driver insisted and, hesitantly, I entered. As we walked in, we did indeed see grounds filled with gravestones. I took many pictures of the gravestones although I could not find, and did not really expect to find, my grandparents' gravestones. I cannot read Hebrew so I was not able to read the names on the gravestones. But I had no doubt that I was standing in the cemetery where some of my grandparents (and perhaps other ancestors of mine) were buried. Only as we were leaving did I notice the black metal entrance gate with a Jewish star lying on the ground.

Then we went to the Piltz River. When my parents first met, they took a 15-minute walk. I did not know where they walked to, so in my memoirs I had them walk to the Piltz River. Now I was able to stand at its banks. It was a narrow, shallow river at the point where we stood but meaningful to me all the same.

Then it was time to drive around the market square one last time and return to Cracow. Kystyna told me she had enjoyed the trip as, in all her years of living in Cracow, she'd never before been to Piltz. It was 5:00 p.m. when we arrived back at my hotel.

That evening, I met with Joachim at the Center for Jewish Culture and told him of my experience. He said he'd never have known about Piltz if he hadn't gone horseback riding in a nearby town. He gave me a paperback book, Cmentarz Żydowski w Pilicy, edited by Leszka Hondo and published by the Uniwersytet Jagiellonski in Krakow in 1995. This 328-page book, part of a series on Polish-Jewish Studies, contains pictures of all the gravestones at the Jewish cemetery in Piltz, with information on the deceased in Polish and Hebrew, along with an index of names. I asked Joachim why there was an entire book published about the Jewish cemetery in Piltz when Piltz was only one of hundreds of such shtetlakh in Poland. He said that the idea for the book came from two young men from Olkusz, a town near Piltz. They suggested it since there are neither funds nor personnel to maintain all the Jewish cemeteries. So creating an inventory of the gravestones and documenting them in such books was a practical way to maintain the information. The book on Piltz was the first such book.

I tried finding my family's names in the index but was unsuccessful. Then I realized that some of the names in the index were first names, while others were surnames. I found a Szjandla in the index, the first name of my maternal grandmother, and an Efraim Baruch, the first and middle names of my paternal grandfather, but I had no other reason to believe those deceased had been my grandparents.

After my return to my Potomac, Maryland home, as I was reviewing my research material in connection with writing this account, I was again puzzled by the conflicting information I had received on the two Piltzes. Only this time I was able to solve the mystery. Warren Blatt of JewishGen had the answer. There had only ever been one Piltz! But the internal provincial borders changed over the years. That's why Piltz was at various times in the provinces of Radom, Kielce, and Katowice, and is today in Slask province.

On August 4, 2001, before my trip to Poland, I saw Richard Bernstein on Book TV on C-Span 2. Bernstein is the author of Ultimate Journey; Retracing the Path of an Ancient Buddhist Monk Who Crossed Asia in Search of Enlightenment, published in paperback in 1996 and hardcover in 2001. Hsuan Tsang, a Buddhist monk, set out in 629 from the Tang dynasty capital of Chang-an (currently Xian, which I visited in 1993) to India to see the principal shrines of his religion, and he made a record of his years-long voyage that had served generations of travelers along the Silk Road. Bernstein, a former New York Times correspondent in China and now a Times book critic, retraced the monk's trail and made the following comments about his trip on the program:

Travel is a metaphor for a deeper search.
Travel is a way of finding yourself.
You have to go far in order to come back to yourself.

He was right on all three counts.

Radom 1932 Address Book

Transcribed by Lena Fizman

Presented below is an alphabetical listing of all 1,336 Jewish names from the Księga Adresowa m. Radomia na Rok 1932 [Address Book for the City of Radom for 1932]. The Address Book is a business directory or "Yellow Pages", containing lists of professionals, organizations and businesses, all arranged by profession or type of business, and commercial advertisements. Lena Fizman has transcribed them into one alphabetical sequence. Non-Jewish names and businesses have been excluded from this transcript.

For background information, see "Address Book of Radom for 1932", in Kielce-Radom SIG Journal II:4 (Autumn 1998), pages 19-21.

There are approximately 85 advertisements for Jewish professionals and businesses in the book, and Lena has created scanned images of them. For those businesses with an ad, as indicated via a page number in the "Ad" column below, Lena would be more than happy to take enquiries from members and can email them the scanned image. Her email address is <lfizman@bigpond.com>, and her home address is 7/2 Liscard Street, Elsternwick, 3185, Melbourne, Australia.

Sara's Children: The Destruction of Chmielnik

By Suzan E. Hagstrom (Sergeant Kirkland's Press, 2001)

Book Review, by Howard B. Zakai

With the countless books, narratives and testimonies written and published about the horrors of the Holocaust in the past half-century, it sometimes becomes difficult to effectively differentiate one story from another. But Suzan E. Hagstrom's recent addition to such an important collection, Sara's Children: The Destruction of Chmielnik, is unique because it illustrates the over-arching power of survival from Nazi tyranny and the necessity to continue telling the devastating tale of what humans can do and have done to one another. This moving narrative, based on the recorded memories of the five children of the Garfinkel family of Chmielnik, demonstrates the miraculous will to live, amidst the death of millions.

Through the voices of the Garfinkels – Bela, Nathan, Sonia, Helen and Regina – Hagstrom, a freelance journalist now in San Diego, first takes us back to pre-War Chmielnik, a predominantly Jewish town in the Kielce province. Ranging from their early teens to about twenty years of age, the children had enjoyed a life that concentrated on education and work, religion and politics, family and romance. Despite being occasionally tainted by the latent anti-Semitism that festered, it was a time that stood in stark contrast to the terror that was to ensue. As the Nazis transformed Chmielnik into a semi-closed ghetto, daily focus shifted to the basic instinct to survive. We are told of the chronic preoccupation of starvation and the risks the family members took to obtain food, supplies and money. Duress was only exacerbated by the random beatings and humiliation of Jews, including the Garfinkels' father Kalman, by Nazi soldiers.

It was at the fateful liquidation of Chmielnik in October 1942 that the young Garfinkels were forever separated from Kalman and their dear mother Sara. Bela and Regina were transported to one work camp, while Sonia, Helen, and Nathan labored in Skarzysko-Kamienna, although the young man was in a different section. The book intensely delves into the gruesome hardships the Garfinkels endured during the War, including aching with hunger, battling fever, typhus and other diseases, laboring for countless hours without break and struggling to avoid death. Also probed is the psychological mindset of perpetrator, victim and bystander. Some guards retained some morality by permitting the girls use of a hidden washroom or looking the other way to allow prisoners to take extra rations of bread. But in their evil actions, most officers were the epitome of a harrowing and macabre cruelty: One shot prisoners in the mouth after teasing them with food. Four Nazis took turns punching inmates, including Nathan from the corners of a boxing ring for sport as they listened to Wagner's "Ride of the Valkyries."

Additionally, Hagstrom interviewed many other survivors from Chmielnik, many now in Toronto and New York, who underwent similar experiences to those of the Garfinkels. Each tells of the many relatives never seen again, cries of the many deaths witnessed, shouts at the evil of the Nazis and sighs at the destruction of life and culture. Stories were not only corroborated by others' testimonies, but also by books and encyclopedias written by historians such as Martin Gilbert. Hagstrom's research went even further by visiting the various concentration camps and archive centers in Poland and even obtaining a valuable primary source document – an actual transport list of Chmielnikers to one of the labor camps.

Sara's Children is special because it is neither merely a history of the Garfinkel family nor is it a simple chronology of the town of Chmielnik during the Second World War. Transcending its individualized focus, it is the testament of every Jewish family of every community of the time. The ending of the book may be characterized as bittersweet, for while we may smile at seeing that Garfinkels survived and were able to start their lives anew, we are ominously conscious of the rich life and myriad of families destroyed. Sara's Children is not just a simple Holocaust testimony for the historian or a resource to a Chmielnik researcher. By connecting to the minds of the Garfinkel children, it is a work that touches every moral individual and makes him feel the nightmare of millions of his fellow humans.

Extract Data in this Issue

Pilica	Births, Marriages, Deaths	1808-1825	Robert Heyman
Chęciny	Births, Marriages	1826-1833	Lauren Davis, Dolores Ring

The vital record extracts for this issue are the 1808-1825 births, marriages and deaths for Pilica, prepared by Robert Heyman; and the 1826-1833 Chęciny births and marriages prepared by Lauren B. Eisenberg Davis and Dolores Lee Ring. This data has been extracted from the civil registration books in possession of the Polish State Archives, and microfilmed by the Church of Jesus Christ Latter-day Saints (LDS). These extractions include information derived directly from the original registrations on the following LDS microfilms:

- #0,875,265 Pilica 1808, 1811-1815BD, 1808-1815M
- #0,875,266 Pilica 1816-1821, 1823 BMD
- #0,875,267 Pilica 1824-1825 BMD,
Pilica 1808/1815 BMD (outlying areas)
- #0,875,268 Pilica 1816/1825 BMD (outlying areas)
- #0,730,262 Chęciny 1826-1829
- #0,730,263 Chęciny 1830-1839

There are additional microfilmed records available for both Pilica and Chęciny.

Pilica

Pilica (known as "Piltz" in Yiddish) was located in Olkusz powiat, in western Kielce gubernia. Pilica is a "new" town for us, for which we have not previously published any extracts. Here we present the Jewish births, marriages and deaths recorded in the Roman Catholic civil registers of Pilica for 1808-1825.

Note that the registers for Pilica start in 1808 – two years earlier than for any other town we've published – because Pilica was in the small slice of westernmost Kielce gubernia which was part of the Kingdom of Poland earlier, having been part of the 1795 Prussian partition. For details, see "Geopolitical History of the Pilica Region" in Kielce-Radom SIG Journal, I:3 (Summer 1997), pages 12-14.

The early vital records of Pilica are on four microfilms. Like Wolbrom, there is a main section apparently comprising Pilica proper, where most of the Jews lived (it can be inferred from the records that approximately half the residents were Jewish). Then there is a section of outlying villages, where there are very, very few Jewish records. Almost all the records were in very good condition, and not hard to read. Note that events in the townlet of Ogródzieniec (6 miles east of Pilica) are included in the main section.

Other notes: The records start in May of 1808. Marriage records go from midyear to midyear for the first few years, despite the titles. The records get on track with the calendar year in 1811. For this reason, the records for the 1810 marriages are identical with those for the 1809 marriages. 1809 and 1810 births and deaths, as well as all records for 1822 are missing for the main set. They are missing for the outlying areas as well, and also a couple other sections. Earlier records may not be marked with actual record numbers. In these cases, I used the page number, and these are prefixed with a "P" in the extracts.

Some Jews in the Pilica records had surnames as early as 1808. However, most did not, and did not take surnames until the early 1820s. As with other towns in the area, when the 1821 surname mandate came into force, some families took the opportunity to change theirs. Only a few times were surname changes actually indicated on the records.

Pilica thus is a good town for study in trying to put families together. I have put in my own suppositions for surnames. These are indicated in parentheses. Those that are supposed name changes have the original name in parentheses with the letter v (for vel) prior to the original name. When the name change is given in the record, it is indicated in these abstracts without the parentheses.

In addition, there are some clues in the original records which are not in the abstracts. For example, house numbers are included for the principals in just about all the records, and for the witnesses as well in the earlier records. Witnesses are not extracted here (except for some in the later deaths), and sometimes explicit relationships are given (this starts about the mid-1810s).

Chęciny

This issue also contains a large set of early Chęciny records: 777 births and 180 marriages, covering 1826-1833. These were originally extracted by Lauren B. Eisenberg Davis, and proofread and updated by Dolores Lee Ring.

Additional information on surnames, maiden names and patronymics has been derived by the extractors from an analysis of this and other data from Chęciny, as well as records from surrounding towns, tracking families over an extended period of time. All conjectural information is noted in square brackets [], to differentiate from the data that appears in the original records. The conjectures do not appear in the record itself.

The Kielce-Radom SIG Journal has previously published extracts of the 1810-1825 Chęciny Jewish births, in I:1; the 1850-1867 marriages, in IV:4; and the 1868-1884 marriages, in III:1.
